Massengale to chair Commission in 1990

Martin A. Massengale, chancellor of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, has been reelected by the NCAA Presidents Commission to serve as its chair in 1990.

Massengale was the only candidate nominated in a process conducted by mail. He will serve as chair until his term on the Commission ends in January 1991.

The Commission currently is conducting a mail nomination procedure to begin the selection of its Divisions I, II and III subcommittee chairs for 1991. The current division chairs all end their service on the Commission when the 1990 NCAA Convention ends: Lattie F. Coor, University of Vermont, Division I; Thomas A. Bond, Eastern New Mexico University, Division II, and the Rev. William J. Byron, Catholic University, Division III.

Massengale was elected Commission chair in late July 1988 to replace John Brooks Slaughter, who left the Commission when he became president at Occidental College that summer.

The Nebraska chancellor has been a Commission member since late 1985, when he was appointed as the Big Eight Conference representative to complete the term of Duane Acker, then president at Kansas State

Martin A. Massengale

University.

Massengale has been at Nebraska since 1976, serving as vice-chancellor for agriculture and natural resources until he was named chancellor in 1981. Earlier this year, he also was named interim president of the University of Nebraska System, and he currently holds both positions.

He was a faculty member and administrator for 19 years at the University of Arizona before moving to Nebraska. He earned his bachelor's degree at Western Kentucky University and his master's and doctorate at the University of Wisconsin, Madison.

Delegates to vote on only one Convention consent package

(Editor's Note: This is the first in a series of six articles reviewing the legislation that will be considered at the 84th annual NCAA Convention January 7-10 in Dallas. This article covers the 23 proposals included in the consent package. In the succeeding five issues of The NCAA News, the other topical groupings of amendments will be presented in the order in which they will appear in the Convention agenda.)

For more than a decade, there have been consent packages of legislative proposals at NCAA Conventions. There were two per year — one for the constitution, one for the bylaws — until last year, when there was a special package presented by the Special Committee on Deregulation and Rules Simplification, in addition to the other two.

And now there will be just one.

Because of the reorganization of the NCAA Manual that was approved at the 1989 Convention, legislation that used to be in the constitution (now called "dominant" provisions, requiring a two-thirds vote for approval) now is scattered in both the constitution and the bylaws. Thus, the appearance of the single consent package, including all types of legislative provisions — dominant, federated and common.

As before, the consent package is intended to include legislation that is noncontroversial and frequently "housekeeping" in nature. It is voted upon with a single motion and a single vote, unless a delegate asks that a given proposal be removed for separate action.

Because this year's package includes some dominant provisions, a two-thirds vote of the delegates at the general business session January 9 will be required for approval.

There are 23 amendments in the package, compared to 38 in the three separate consent packages a year ago. It is the smallest consent offering since the 1986 Convention, when there were only 13 proposals in the packages. The largest ever was 43 a year later.

Included in the package for action at Dallas are these proposals:

No. 1: Permit member institutions to submit minimum sports sponsorship waiver requests by October 1, rather than July 1.

No. 2: Preclude for-profit organizations and individual applicants from being eligible for corresponding membership in the NCAA.

No. 3: Delete the list of specific reasons for which the Association's annual mem-

Schultz offers views on pending legislation

NCAA Executive Director Richard D. Schultz debated the proposed "Student-Athlete Right-to-Know Act" and assessed the chances of proposals to shorten the time demands of college basketball and football on student-athletes during a recent appearance at a sports business conference in South Carolina.

In the debate, which also featured remarks by a state senator and a sports consultant who support the Federal act that would require universities and colleges to report student-athlete graduation rates, Schultz reiterated the Association's position regarding the legislation.

The legislation is unnecessary because universities and colleges are taking action to address the concerns that prompted members of Congress to propose the act, Schultz told approximately 250 participants in the International Conference on Sports Business earlier this month in Columbia, South Carolina.

Delegates to the 1990 NCAA Convention in Dallas will consider a Presidents Commission proposal that will require graduation-rate disclosure in Divisions I and II, as well as a proposal by the Division III Steering Committee to require similar disclosure in Division III.

Panelists split

Another panelist, who directs North Carolina State University's Academic Skills Center, said he supports NCAA supervision of the reporting of graduation rates, so long as the Association is able to standardize how the rates are reported.

"Adjusted vs. unadjusted rates are misleading," said Hugh Fuller, whose center is part of North Carolina State's provost's office. "Freshmen should be followed all the way through for the five or six years it takes most students to graduate."

NCAA, TV networks begin talks on basketball tournament contract

An NCAA committee begins negotiations this week with representatives of the three major television networks on a contract for the Division I Men's Basketball Championship, and the new contract could double the current three-year, $166 million agreement with CBS Sports.

Thomas W. Jernstedt, NCAA associate executive director told the Associated Press, "We would say we'll be very disappointed if it's any less than that."

The current contract expires after the 1990 Final Four. It represented a 72 percent increase over the previous contract.

"The networks have told us openly that their business is doing quite well," Jernstedt said. "Now, there's no question the market is up. We're looking at what's been going on in Major League Baseball and in the NBA," which recently signed a four-year, $600 million television deal with NBC Sports.

James E. Delany, Big Ten Conference commissioner and chair of the Division I Men's Basketball Committee, said the timing of the tournament and the income level of tournament fans work in the NCAA's favor.

James E. Delany

"It comes at a time when football is over and baseball hasn't started. It's quality programming that involves the entire country. There are 64 teams in the tournament, and they touch every section of the country."

"It has been determined that people who watch the NCAA tournament are generally very attractive to advertisers. They're usually well-established consumers, college graduates," Delany said.

Delany said the committee is considering a contract longer than three years as well as a dual-network arrangement.

"It's hard to say what might happen," he said. "We've talked about splitting the bracket down the middle and network A would cover part of the bracket up to the Final Four, and network B would have the rest of the bracket up to the Final Four, and then they would alternate televising the Final Four. It's been suggested that if we go to two networks, it would increase promotion of the tournament by 70 to 100 percent."

Along with increased revenue, the NCAA also is expected to demand fewer beer advertisements and encourage those advertisers to promote responsible drinking.

The three networks will make their presentations November 20 in Kansas City, Missouri.

"Then, everybody will regroup and on Tuesday, we'll have another session with each network to answer whatever questions people have," Jernstedt said. "Then, later in the week, the committee will call in people again if necessary. We hope to have a contract by Thanksgiving, but it could stretch on to the week-

Knight Foundation names reform panel

The Knight Foundation announced November 16 that it has named eight university presidents representing major conferences and independent colleges to its blue-ribbon commission seeking reforms in intercollegiate athletics.

The 21-member panel also will include the president of Coca-Cola Co., the former chair of NBC, a U.S. Congressman who was an all-America basketball player and Rhodes scholar, and a former Heisman Trophy winner.

Established in September with a mandate to propose a reform agenda for intercollegiate athletics, the commission is headed by the Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh, president emeritus of the University of Notre Dame, and William Friday, president emeritus of the University of North Carolina System. They are serving as co-chairs.

"The Knight Foundation is gratified that such an outstanding group has agreed to join Father Hesburgh and Dr. Friday in this important undertaking," said Foundation President Creed Black, who will serve as an ex officio member of the commission.

Father Hesburgh and Friday said they will recommend that the commission seek the advice of conference commissioners, athletics directors, coaches and faculty members, and that representatives of these groups be actively consulted in the work of the commission.

bership dues are imposed.

No. 4: Permit the Council, in the interim between annual Conventions, to adopt noncontroversial legislative amendments clearly necessary to promote the normal and orderly administration of the Association's legislation. Such amendments could not involve recruiting or eligibility matters, and the Council would have to submit legislation at the next annual Convention to confirm its actions.

No. 5: Confirm that the Association's elected officers are exempt from the playing-conference limitation as it applies to the Executive Committee.

No. 6: Confirm that active member institutions may be transferred from their regular geographical districts and specify that an annual listing of such transfers will appear in the NCAA Directory.

No. 7: Provide that a prospective student-athlete may be found to have engaged in unethical conduct under certain conditions and thus declared ineligible for competition at any member institution. An appeal opportunity is included, as is a provision that providing false or misleading information to the NCAA or to an institution during the course of inquiries into possible violations is contrary to the Association's ethical-conduct legislation.

No. 8: Specify that the contact limitations set forth in Bylaw 13.1.4 apply separately in Division II to the period in which a prospective student-athlete is in high school and to the period September 1 following the prospect's completion of high school.

No. 9: Stipulate that when a member institution utilizes any aircraft other than commercial airline transportation in conjunction with an official visit, it shall pay the charter rate for the use of such aircraft.

No. 10: Specify that institutions listed in the U.S. Department of Education catalog will be considered collegiate institutions for purposes of NCAA legislation only if they are coded with an "H" in that catalog.

No. 11: Confirm that a composite score of 18 on the enhanced ACT test is equivalent to a composite score of 15 on the previous ACT test. The enhanced version first was administered October 28 of this year.

No. 12: Confirm that a Division I prospect may fulfill core-curriculum requirements with courses taken during a repeated regular term or academic year of secondary studies completed after high-school graduation, provided, if the requirement is met during a term, rather than a full academic year, the student does not enroll as a full-time student until the subsequent academic year.

No. 13: Confirm that grace periods for practice exist for two-year college transfers who report for practice before the student's high-school or two-year college record has been certified.

No. 14: Clarify that the international-competition exception in the annual contest exemptions for football relates only to foreign tours, which already are exempted under other NCAA legislation.

No. 15: Confirm that Division III member institutions are not permitted to conduct any spring football contest, practice or scrimmage.

No. 16: Confirm that a member institution shall report annually its sponsorship of a varsity intercollegiate team in a sport on the NCAA official information form in order to be eligible to enter a team or an individual in championship competition in that sport.

No. 17: Specify that the maximum three-year period applicable to a waiver of division membership criteria begins on the September 1 after the Convention at which the waiver is approved.

No. 18: Clarify that the information in the parenthetical phrases within Bylaws 20.9.3.3.7.1, 20.10.3.5.7.1 and 20.11.3.2.7.1 does not constitute an exclusive list of circumstances under which the Council may waive membership requirements related to the minimum numbers of contests and participants.

No. 19: Confirm that one of the three Council representatives on the Student-Athlete Advisory Committee shall serve as chair of that committee.

No. 20: Establish the Walter Byers

Scholarship Committee as a standing NCAA committee.

No. 21: Specify that the position on the Committee on Competitive Safeguards and Medical Aspects of Sports previously allocated to an undergraduate student-athlete shall be reallocated to an individual active in sports-medicine research.

No. 22: Change the name of the Legislation and Interpretations Committee to the Interpretations Committee.

No. 23: Delete the requirement for Division II or III representation on the Men's Gymnastics Committee.

Hardin-Simmons to start football

Football returns to Hardin-Simmons University next fall, but it will be a far cry from the glory years when Sammy Baugh coached the Cowboys.

The school dropped football in 1963, two years after the Border Conference folded and three years after Baugh returned to the National Football League as a coach.

Jesse C. Fletcher, school president, said November 16 that the football team will be "nonscholarship" and will play against similar programs. It will compete either in NCAA Division III or in the NAIA, he said.

As part of the switch in athletics programs, all sports except baseball will be conducted without athletically related financial aid and the school will drop out of the Trans America Athletic Conference. The university was a charter member of the TAAC and the final conference competition will be this basketball season.

Fletcher said it is possible the school eventually might join another conference that competes without athletics aid, the Associated Press reported.

Merlin Morrow, athletics director, said scholarship commitments for existing students would be honored but emphasized that the focus now would be on recruiting students who simply want to play intercollegiate sports as part of the collegiate experience.

The school's rifle and cross country teams will be dropped as part of the transition, Morrow said.

Baugh's 1958 team was undefeated in Border Conference play and lost close games to Baylor and LSU, a top-ranked team that year. Wyoming defeated the Cowboys by a single point in the Sun Bowl to end the season.

NCAA Bylaw 11.3—limitations on coaches' compensation and remuneration

Member institutions are reminded that in accordance with Bylaw 11.3.1, the institution, as distinguished from any outside source, must remain in control of determining who is to be its employee and the amount of salary that employee is to receive within the restrictions specified by NCAA legislation. Bylaw 11.3.2.1 does permit a staff member to earn income in addition to the institutional salary by performing services for outside groups, provided the compensation is for additional work actually performed and at a rate commensurate with the going rate in that locality for services of like character; further, such outside work must be in conformity with institutional policy and with the approval of the institution.

In this regard, Bylaw 11.3.2.2 prohibits an outside source from paying or regularly supplementing an athletics department staff member's annual salary and from arranging to supplement that salary for an unspecified achievement. This prohibition would include the donation of cash from outside sources to the institution earmarked for the staff member's salary or supplemental income. This regulation also would prohibit a member of the institution's coaching staff from supplementing a fellow staff member's salary from his or her own resources. It would be permissible for an outside source to donate funds to the institution to be used as determined by the institution, and it would be permissible for the institution, at its sole discretion, to use such funds to pay or supplement a staff member's salary.

Bylaw 11.3.2.3 provides that a member institution may permit an outside individual, group or agency to supplement an athletics department staff member's salary with a direct cash payment in recognition of a specific and extraordinary achievement (e.g., contribution during career to the athletics department of the institution, winning a conference or national championship, number of games or meets won during career), provided such a cash supplement is in recognition of a specific achievement and is in conformance with institutional policy.

Finally, Bylaw 11.3.2.8 prohibits staff members of a member institution's athletics department from accepting compensation or gratuities for scheduling athletics contests or individual meet participation with another institution or a sponsor of athletics competition. It specifically precludes the acceptance of such compensation or gratuities from other institutions, schedule brokers or agents, and television networks or syndicators.

NCAA Bylaws 13.1.3.5 and 13.1.3.6—Divisions I and II football contact periods

Member institutions are reminded that during a contact period, it is permissible for authorized athletics department staff members to make in-person, off-campus recruiting contacts and evaluations. In the sport of football, a Division I institution may contact a prospective student-athlete from December 1 through the Saturday following the initial date for the signing of the National Letter of Intent, except during dead periods. In Division I, dead periods exist from 12:01 a.m. on the day of registration for the annual convention of the American Football Coaches Association to 12:01 a.m. on the day after completion of the convention, as well as during the period 48 hours prior to 8 a.m. on the initial date for signing the National Letter of Intent. In Division II, contacts may occur from December 1 until 30 days subsequent to the Saturday following the initial date for signing the National Letter of Intent, except during the dead period 48 hours prior to 8 a.m. on the initial date for signing the National Letter of Intent.

In Divisions I and II, institutional staff members may contact a prospective student-athlete no more than three times at the prospect's educational institution and three times at sites other than the prospect's educational institution. Each visit at a prospect's educational institution must receive approval from that institution's executive officer or the executive officer's designated representative. A member institution's staff members may visit a prospect's educational institution on not more than one occasion during a particular week, regardless of the total number of prospects enrolled in the institution.

During its August 1986 meeting, the NCAA Council determined that during the permissible contact periods, the one visit to the prospect's educational institution in a particular week would apply whether the visit is for contact purposes or evaluation purposes. For example, if an institutional football staff member visits the prospect's educational institution on a particular day of the week during a permissible contact period to review transcripts, talk to the prospect's coach or view the prospect participating in a sport other than football, it would not be permissible for the institution to visit the high school on a separate day of the same week for the purpose of contacting the prospect.

Finally, member institutions in all divisions may not contact a prospect or the prospect's relatives or guardians for purposes of recruitment until the prospect has completed the junior year in high school. (U.S. service academy exceptions to this provision are set forth in Bylaw 13.16.1.)

NCAA Bylaw 16.12.2.6—athletics equipment or apparel

Member institutions are reminded that it is not permissible for a student-athlete to accept (at no personal expense) athletics equipment, supplies or clothing (e.g., tennis racquets, golf clubs, hockey sticks, balls, shirts, shoes) from a manufacturer or commercial enterprise. Such items may be provided to the student-athlete's institution to be utilized by the institution's team in accordance with accepted practices for issuance and retrieval of athletics equipment and apparel.

This material was provided by the NCAA legislative services department as an aid to member institutions. If an institution has a question it would like to have answered in this column, the question should be directed to William B. Hunt, assistant executive director for legislative services, at the NCAA national office.

proposal includes the use of an adjusted graduation rate that would take into account students who transfer to an institution or leave that institution in good standing.

Support for a Federal act was offered by panelists Michael Barnes, president of Intercollegiate Athletic Consultants, Inc., and South Carolina Sen. Warren Giese, a former athletics director and head football coach at the University of South Carolina, Columbia.

Giese said the legislation could help curtail the emphasis on athletics over academics that he said has resulted from a "breakdown that came with big television gates."

"I'm in favor of reporting (graduation-rate) information by sport, by gender, by race and by school, so that parents and the public would know," Giese said.

A version of the act recently was approved by the Senate's Committee on Labor and Human Relations, which means the full Senate could vote on the bill during December.

The House of Representatives' Education and Labor Committee has not voted on the House's version of the bill.

Schedule cuts likely

While in South Carolina, Schultz also said he believes that delegates to the 1990 Convention are likely to shorten spring football practice and reduce the number of regular-season basketball games—especially if the Presidents Commission is able to lobby effectively for the changes.

"If (Commission members are) going to be successful, they are going to have to do a good job of lobbying their colleagues and getting them out to the Convention to vote," Schultz said. "There'll be some amendments—and I think they're aware of that—but I think you'll see some reductions."

The Presidents Commission has proposed that spring football practice for Divisions I-A, I-AA and II be cut to 10 practice sessions in an 18-day period, with no contact permitted, while a slightly different approach to spring practice in Division

II has been proposed by that division's steering committee.

The presidents also have proposed reducing the permissible number of basketball contests from 28 in Divisions I and II and 26 in Division III to 25 in all divisions and eliminating exceptions to the contest limit. Also, the legislation would push back the beginning of practice to November 1 and the beginning of competition to December 1 and would prohibit pre-season conditioning until October 1.

Hear student-athletes

Schultz believes the membership will be responsive to complaints by student-athletes in the Presidents Commission's recent National Study of Intercollegiate Athletics that they have little time for anything but their sports.

"The one thing that was the strongest and kept coming more and more (from student-athletes' comments in the study) was this type of thing: 'We don't have enough time during the season to do the type of academic work we'd like to do, and we don't have enough time in the off-season to do the things that other students like to do,'" Schultz said.

The executive director also predicted legislation would be proposed at the 1991 Convention to restrict further the amount of time student-athletes are required to spend on their sports.

"I think that you are going to see legislation that's going to set limits on the amount of practice time you can have per week and the amount of off-season conditioning that you can have. It's a real concern of the athletes."

Schultz was one of more than 100 speakers and panelists who participated in the sports business conference, which was sponsored by the University of South Carolina's sport administration department.

I-A conferences are Lamar Alexander, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Southeastern Conference; John A. DiBiaggio, Michigan State University, Big Ten Conference; Thomas K. Peterson, University of Utah, Western Athletic Conference; A. Kenneth Pye, Southern Methodist University, Southwest Athletic Conference, and Charles E. Young, University of California, Los Angeles, Pacific-10 Conference.

Bryce Jordan, president of Pennsylvania State University, will represent independent institutions.

Richard D. Schultz, executive director of the NCAA, had agreed earlier to serve as a member of the commission.

Organization representatives in addition to Schultz are James J. Whalen, Ithaca College, chair of the American Council of Education, and Douglas Dibbert, the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, president-elect of the Council of Alumni Association Executives.

At-large members

At-large members are Donald Kcough, president, Coca-Cola Co.; Richard W. Kazmaier, president of Kazmaier & Associates; Rep. Thomas McMillen, Congressman from Maryland; Jane Cahill Pfeiffer, former chair of NBC; Donna E. Shalala, chancellor, the University of Wisconsin, Madison; LeRoy T. Walker, chancellor emeritus of North Carolina Central University and past president of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, and Clifton Wharton, chief executive officer, Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association-College Retirement Equities Fund.

Kazmaier, the last Heisman Trophy winner from the Ivy League when he played at Princeton University in 1951, is also chair of the President's Council on Physical Fitness and Sports. McMillen, a basketball star at the University of Maryland, College Park, where he was all-America, was a Rhodes scholar and played 11 years in the National Basketball Association before running for Congress.

"With the membership of the commission now complete, attention can be turned to selecting a staff and beginning work," Black said.

Father Hesburgh and Friday said they expect to have a staff selected by the end of the year and hope to hold the first meeting of the full commission in January.

Schultz comments

"This is a prestigious group of national leaders, and the majority of them are from NCAA member institutions," Schultz said. "I look forward to the opportunity to work with them on this commission."

"I believe that the announced intention to consult with athletics administrators and coaches is a strong indication that Father Hesburgh and President Friday will assure that the views of the practitioners in college athletics are carefully considered. If we are to have meaningful reform, it must be based on accurate information and realistic premises," Schultz said.

Four of the university presidents named to the commission are current members of the NCAA Presidents Commission: Hearn, Massengale (who serves as chair of the Presidents Commission), Peterson and Young. Whalen is a former member and officer of the Presidents Commission.

It was originally announced that Father Hesburgh would chair the commission and Friday would be vice-chair. Black said Father Hesburgh subsequently suggested that they share the work and the responsibility as co-chairs.

Black said when announcing the establishment of the commission that he thought its work could be wrapped up within two years at a "ballpark cost figure" of around $2 million. He described the expenditure as a natural corollary to the foundation's program of grants to higher education.

Devlin accepts position with compliance staff

NCAA legislative assistant Maureen E. Devlin will join the Association's compliance services department December 4 as a compliance representative. She joined the national office staff June 20, 1988.

An honors graduate in government from Harvard University, Devlin was a Radcliffe Scholar and earned seven varsity letters as an undergraduate. She was captain of the women's skiing team for two years and also participated in cross country, track and softball.

As a senior at Harvard, she created and marketed "Bike Ireland," a bicycle touring business.

Devlin earned a master's degree in sports administration at Pennsylvania State University, where she completed an internship as assistant athletics events coordinator before joining the NCAA. She was involved in the management of Penn State's home athletics events and served as tournament director for special events.

In addition to her responsibilities as an NCAA legislative assistant, Devlin served as staff liaison to the NCAA Council Subcommittee on Initial-Eligibility Waivers and coordinated the administration of the department's conference-contact and conference-exchange programs.

As a compliance representative, Devlin will be involved primarily in the administration of institutional services, including institutional compliance reviews, the new institutional certification program and other aspects of the Association's member-institution self-study process.

CWS discussions continue

The mayor of Omaha has asked the NCAA to commit the College World Series to his city for five years. Under the current contract, Omaha will host the series though the 1991 season.

Mayor P. J. Morgan met with the Division I Baseball Committee November 14 in Kansas City, Missouri, and outlined a program for improvements to Rosenblatt Stadium.

The Omaha World-Herald reported that the five-year commitment sought by Morgan would extend through 1995.

Dennis L. Poppe, NCAA director of championships, said, "We have an existing contract in effect, and we are operating under the agreement."

Poppe said the committee took Morgan's request under advisement and will begin reviewing its options in a meeting scheduled December 6.

"There is no deadline for arriving at a decision," Poppe said, noting that the current CWS contract is a two-year roll-over arrangement whereby Omaha remains the tournament host unless notified otherwise by September 1.

Poppe said the committee was seeking "significant improvements to the stadium," including expanded seating capacity. Rosenblatt currently seats about 17,500.

end." "The hopes on all sides are to get the NCAA tournament exclusively, but more than likely we'll see a split (between two networks)," Dick Ebersol, president of NBC Sports, told United Press International.

Ebersol said NBC had enough money left after the NBA contract to negotiate aggressively. "We intend to come back with all or part of the contract," he said, although CBS has held the last two contracts and wants to maintain exclusivity and ABC is said to be very interested in negotiating an agreement.

"Negotiating the contract will be relatively easy compared to determining what the distribution of revenues will be," Jernstedt said.

Delany said, "We've asked people to let us know what they think. My expectation is there will be lots of people making suggestions."

Survey examines coaches' concerns about ethics

By J. Richard Polidoro

The problem of ethics in sport has become one of the most compelling issues facing our current programs in intercollegiate athletics.

Almost weekly, newspaper stories across the country detail accounts of a variety of abuses. Critics argue that sport today has lost its original purpose, particularly at the intercollegiate level. Many, like Sports Illustrated's Rick Telander, have gone so far as to say that "big-time college sport has nothing to do with college anymore."

While the problem of ethics in sport is not new, the problems associated with the ethical behavior of our intercollegiate athletes and coaches appear to be much more intricate today; unethical practices assuredly are attracting much greater exposure and disciplinary action.

With each new report of abuse or sanction, the integrity of our intercollegiate athletics programs has indeed been increasingly challenged. What is happening in our nation's intercollegiate athletics programs? Why are so many schools, coaches and athletes turning to unethical actions? Is the situation as bad as it appears?

Many are of the view that the current economic and societal benefits associated with success have resulted in a win-at-all-costs philosophy in society. They further contend that this philosophy has permeated the ranks of sport on all levels and that sport is merely a reflection of a society that has lost its sense of right and wrong.

Information needed

Whatever the cause or circumstance, it is becoming abundantly clear that we urgently need to address the issue of ethical behavior in sport and to develop greatly improved approaches in searching for solutions to the problem of ethics in a sport context. Very little, if any, research has been completed toward this end, and many questions remain unanswered.

The purpose of the survey was to obtain a nationwide sampling of college and university coaches to determine (1) ethically questionable practices currently perceived or experienced by coaches at the college and university level; (2) what formal training coaches have received, if

Due to the nature of the questionnaire, not every individual completing the survey responded to each item; in several instances, more than one response to each question was received. The results of the survey therefore reflect varying numbers of responses.

The primary question asked was, "What do you consider to be the most commonly employed ethically questionable practice(s) currently prevalent in intercollegiate sports?"

Unethical practices

Current recruiting practices and procedures, cited by 384 of 421 coaches (91.21 percent), were identified as the primary ethical concern (see Table 2). Ethically questionable practices relating to academic integ-

Reader critical of editor's decision

To the Editor:

I am amazed that you would publish information on an undetectable hormone that appears to give the user an edge in endurance (October 30 issue of The NCAA News).

Would it not be more advisable to send such information to the trainers or health professionals of your member institutions rather than in an article that stresses in large print the word undetectable?

Should some pharmaceutical manufacturer come up with an undetectable 'upper' or anabolic steroid, will they come to The NCAA News for free advertising?

I agree that information and education will be our primary weapons in our war on drugs. But information as to what is new on the market and which chemicals are undetectable or not is a real disservice to those of us who would like to see if 'our athlete can beat your athlete,' not if 'our chemist can beat your chemist.'

The NCAA's position on illicit drug use is well-known and admirable. Your judgment is not.

Editor's Note: The intent of the News in publishing the story was, as the writer suggests, to provide the information to trainers and health professionals, in addition to coaches, athletics directors and all collegiate athletics personnel that constitute the more than 25,000 readers of the News. The full headline informed athletics personnel that a Swedish doctor was seeking a ban on the hormone. NCAA policy specifies that The NCAA News is to serve as the primary means of communication to the membership.

Listing graduation rates serves no real purpose

By Pat Livingston

Pittsburgh Business Times-Journal
Excerpted from a column

A perceptive reader feels I have taken an unnecessary shot at Sen. Bill Bradley for introducing a bill that would require U.S. colleges to publish their graduation rates for the protection of student-athletes. He said a recent column of mine missed the point, and perhaps it did.

I concede that education is a problem, but insist, as I did in my column, that graduation rates are not part of it. Nor did I use the NFL figures to minimize the problem. I cited the graduation rate only to show one particular point: When 35 percent of America's football players, who spend an inordinate amount of time on an extracurricular activity, receive their degrees, this should be of political concern only if the general student population is graduating in significantly higher numbers. It is not.

My point merely was that football is not so encompassing an activity that it precludes athletes from getting a quality education. The 35 percent graduation rate in the NFL merely proves that if the student-athlete wants an education, colleges are delighted to make it available to him. What can be more elemental? How will a law dictating the publication of graduation rates affect the 55 to 65 percent of the students who disdain education, whether athletes or not?

I have heard of "unscrupulous institutions," but my sources have been tell-all books, sports writers and talk-show programs. As a matter of fact, I can cite colleges that If the problem is with men's sports, why must women's programs suffer?

"I reflect on my early years in sports and vividly remember being tabbed 'good' in sports because I threw like a boy. In some odd way, being compared to my male playmates was supposed to be a compliment. A girl who was compared to her male counterpart had reached a certain level of proficiency and was often accepted into traditionally male circles.

"Spurred on by this belief, women's programs began to model themselves after men's programs. We tried to play like men, to draw big crowds like men and to offer scholarships like the men.

"Ultimately, women were admitted into the NCAA and to previously all-male conferences. But we weren't given a full membership. There remained a double standard. I was told my salary could not be as high as a man's because I did not operate in the same pressurized situation. Our budget could not be the same as the men's because we would not draw big crowds.

"But now, we are asked to play by the men's rules in terms of length of season and freshman eligibility. Cutting back on women's opportunities in the name of correcting the abuses in men's athletics is not logical. Why can't we have our double standard now?"

"I think college football would suffer (if spring practice were cut from 20 to 10 days).

"That's a time for instruction, a time for fundamentals. If you can't do that... and they still only give you three weeks to get ready for a game... you won't have as good a game. I think we would have an inferior product.

"I don't understand that one (proposal) at all. Nobody practices every day in the spring. Everybody gets a couple of days off. You don't have as much meeting time. To me, it's very myopic."

"It's getting better for the NCAA and worse for the kids (recruits) all the time. When you can't even accept a free T-shirt, something is wrong.

"It's (six-foul experiment) not any different than the three-point shot or 45-second clock when we experimented with those. We're not advocating anything. We're just willing to take a look at it.

rity was the second most frequently mentioned abuse.

Eighteen of the coaches (4.28 percent) indicated that they were not aware of any unethical practices.

More specific responses from the 384 coaches citing recruiting practices as a major ethical concern are reported in Table 3. These coaches referred to a variety of practices ranging from general recruiting violations to more specific questionable behavior.

While 171 of these coaches (44.53 percent) did not provide more information on specific recruiting practices, 101 (26.30 percent) of the coaches referred to special inducements and treatment for athletes as a currently prevalent abuse. Direct payments to athletes, gifts, payments to families and preferred housing for athletes were among the examples listed. Several of the coaches also referred to the reluctance of some institutions to take immediate action relative to criminal activity of athletes.

More detailed responses from the 162 coaches who cited academically related practices are reported in Table 4, which shows that 67 of the 162 coaches (41.3 percent) expressed concern about the emphasis of athletics over academics. Thirty coaches (18.52 percent) cited the practice of altering transcripts or the changing of grades as a prevalent practice and 29 (17.9 percent) cited general academic cheating.

Ethics training

A second survey question asked what formal college course work, if any, coaches had received in the area of ethics and sport.

Of the 421 coaches participating in the survey, 348 (82.66 percent) indicated that they had no college or university course work in ethics and sport. Only 61 of the coaches (14.49 percent) reported that they had received some course work in the area; most reported that the training was from courses in the general areas of philosophy and religion.

Only a handful of the coaches reported a specific course or courses in the area of ethics applied to sport. Eight coaches (1.90 percent) reported that they had participated in lectures, seminars or conferences relating specifically to ethical issues in sports.

Several coaches who reported no college course work said they had received what they considered formal training in the area of ethics and sport through personal reading, training from parents, coaching experience or service on ethics and rules committees.

Code needed?

The survey also requested the views of coaches about the need for a code of ethics. Specifically, they were asked, "Do you feel it necessary for your coaching association or conference to adopt a specific code of ethics?"

Responses to the question were somewhat mixed. Of the 421 coaches, 219 (52.02 percent) expressed the need for the adoption of established codes of ethics. But 134 coaches (31.83 percent) said it is not necessary for coaching associations or conferences to adopt a code. Another 15 coaches answered "maybe."

Supporters of a code of ethics stated that it would address much-needed standards and expectations. It was strongly suggested that conferences and coaching associations not only need to develop such standards of behavior, but also need to monitor activity and demand full compliance as well. Many suggested that every coach should be required to read and pledge compliance to whatever standards and expectations are established.

Those opposed to a code generally offered one or more of the following reasons:

- Since ethical behavior is highly individualized, a code of ethics mandated by a governing body essentially will do no good. It was the general feeling that a person is either ethical or unethical and that a code of ethics will have little impact on an individual's ethical behavior.

- Unethical behavior will continue in sport as long as people are rewarded for winning and penalized for losing.

- Ethical behavior in intercollegiate sport is an institutional responsibility and not an association or conference responsibility. Many coaches were of the opinion that coaches associations and athletics conferences are far too removed from the situation to have any real impact.

It is interesting to note that many of the coaches alluded to codes of ethics that already exist for a variety of coaches associations and conferences. While these codes tend to state ethical coaching standards and expectations, they also appear to have little impact for lack of enforcement procedures.

'Crisis in integrity'

The results of this study provide further evidence in support of the belief that there is indeed what former Indiana University President John W. Ryan called a "crisis in integrity" in our nation's intercollegiate athletics programs. The reported nature and extent of perceived or experienced ethically questionable practices among coaches appears to be widespread and varied.

This study further suggests that the utilization of unethical practices is not predominantly limited to big-time football and basketball programs, as commonly perceived.

The apparent win-at-all-cost philosophy that is currently eroding our programs is evident by the nature of the reported unethical practices. It is becoming more clear and this study supports the view—that our current programs are being contaminated by the benefits of success (winning).

In part, the prevailing attitude of winning at all costs is driven by the all-too-present need of our institutions of higher education to acquire huge amounts of revenues, alumni support and national exposure—all benefits gained through a winning program. In turn, such pressures on coaches appear to give rise to many of the reported unethical practices.

If this is the case, this study clearly illustrates the urgent need for change. If our intercollegiate athletics programs are to survive public scrutiny and remain viable and important educational entities, changes must be made to improve their ethical environment.

Change possible

It might be possible to effect change by establishing agreed-upon standards and expectations, strong and aggressive monitoring systems, and clear and succinct punitive measures for those not abiding by rules of conduct. With adoption of such a strategy, we at least might be in a better position to weed out those individuals participating in unethical practices.

The development of an aggressive plan for action will require a total commitment from everyone involved in the intercollegiate program—coaches, athletes, coaches associations, governing bodies, officials and the media. Toward this end, the following recommendations are offered.

- A general code of ethics should be established for the coaching profession, with no reference to any particular sport. It should clearly and concisely define standards of conduct and coaching expectations.

- College and university coaches should be required to meet minimal coaching certification requirements, and training in the area of ethics should be an integral part of the certification standards established. Colleges and universities with coaching specializations incorporated in their curricula should require course work specifically focused on the topic of ethics and sport.

- A code of ethics and sportsmanship should be established for all intercollegiate athletes. Once developed, all athletes should be continually apprised of the code and should be held accountable for violations of the expected standards of behavior.

- Institutions need to have a vigorous role in establishing ethical standards and expectations, workable and effective monitoring systems, and clear and concise punitive and disciplinary measures. Standards of coaching behavior need to be fully developed and articulated with each college and university coach and should become linked to the contractual agreement between the university and the coach. Disciplinary measures should be quick and aggressive.

- Institutions need to develop aggressive and concise plans to place the intercollegiate athletics program in proper academic perspective. (These plans should address pressures to win and special inducements or treatment for athletes.)

- Athletics administrators (especially athletics directors) must provide effective leadership in the implementation and management of the university's strategy and adopted plan.

- Coaching associations and conferences must continue their efforts to establish workable and meaningful standards of expected behavior for coaches and member institutions. Conference rules and regulations should be clearly distinct and separate from expected standards of conduct, and measures to ensure compliance should be fully articulated and understood by all.

The NCAA also should give serious consideration to the adoption of a revenue-sharing plan, which would provide for a more equal sharing of tournament and television revenues among all member institutions.

- A code of ethics should be developed for officials.

- The media need to become more sensitive to the need for an academically sound athletics program. Reporters assigned to cover athletics news events should do all they can to reinforce positive and ethically sound performance by players, coaches and institutions. The media might also consider focusing on individual and team performance rather than win-and-loss records.

provide these men with free tutorial services, an embellishment that rarely is included in your child's tuition charges or standard college fees.

I also can cite cases where universities offered to pay tuition at a nearby college for athletes who, having signed professional contracts, had departed immediately for their new surroundings, missing graduating by a couple of credits. The University of Pittsburgh, as a matter of fact, did precisely this for Tony Dorsett, offering to arrange for him to acquire the necessary credits at Southern Methodist University if he wanted his degree.

"A recent striking example was the Washington Redskins' all-star lineman Dexter Manley, college educated, who came forward and admitted he could not read even at junior high level," the reader writes, picking up the one case that provides anecdotal support for the do-gooders.

Dexter Manley can read today. What was Oklahoma State to do with him once becoming aware of his handicap. Reject him? Toss him aside? Knowing that a wasted life might be salvaged through football, did it owe that public satisfaction of summarily expelling him, or did it owe Manley the humane opportunity of remaining in school? Would national security, our sense of morality or common equity be offended by this act of compassion?

But these are minor problems. They certainly are not so grave to attract the attention of a senator. If I were a senator, I would devote time to solving defaults on student loans, which threaten to become as costly as HUD scandals.

What's the political impact that motivates Sen. Bradley to study the graduation rate? Wise students matriculate to learn, to improve themselves, to master a course of study—not merely to graduate. As a matter of fact, if a college's rate of graduation is too satisfactory, that well might be a red flag, a place to avoid.

There also is a growing tendency on the part of star-struck sports fans to promote pay for college athletes. That, too, is a farce. If student-athletes become employees of the universities, it will destroy college football. And this is how it will be done.

If football players become employees, they will pay taxes, which may not be bad if the tax is on the monthly stipend. But will the Internal Revenue Service stop at that? How long do you think it will be before the IRS decides that the value of the scholarship—which runs as much as $20,000 a year—also is taxable?

Scholarships are tax-free because a special provision of the tax code exempts them. Even the wildest of tax lawyers would have a hard time convincing the IRS that, under circumstances such as these, player compensation would be anything but earned income.

And how many athletes, at that age, will be able to come up with that kind of tax money?

Texas won't give up title without a fight

Although Hawaii has been at the top of Division I women's volleyball all season (the Wahines have held the No. 1 position since the first rankings were released in September), Texas is the defending NCAA champion and is not likely to give up its championship without a struggle.

The Longhorns accomplished a year ago what few of the sport's followers even thought possible. With a 3-0 victory over Hawaii in the 1988 final, Texas became the first non-West Coast program to win the Division I crown.

Successfully defending it will take some work.

However, under the direction of head coach Mick Haley, the Longhorns have remained among the top 10 in the national poll throughout the season.

The 1989 Longhorns return enough talent to remain a strong contender. Among those returning are 6-0 junior Quandalyn Harrell and Dagmara Szydzak, both key to Texas' success last year.

Other top returners include sophomore Janine Grammel, 6-0 Nikki Busch, 5-11 Annette Garza and 5-6 Cindy Williamson.

Hawaii coach Dave Shoji hopes his team's success this season will continue into the tournament and result in a fourth title for the Wahines.

Leading the Wahines' attack once again is standout Tee Williams-Sanders, a 5-11 hitter who has seen action in several positions this season. Two other stars are junior hitter Karrie Trieschman and Mary Robins. Both Trieschman and Robins have been injured but should be up and running by tournament time.

The Wahines' big loss came at setter when Martina Cincero graduated.

But Shoji filled the spot with sophomore Cheri Boyer, a player he said is ready to lead the team.

UCLA, which had its hopes shattered last year after a 3-0 semifinal loss to Texas, has a solid core of talent returning for another attempt at the title.

Coach Andy Banachowski has 10 veterans, including five starters, which give the Bruins one of the most solid squads in the nation. Among the returning starters are 1988 Pacific-10 player of the year Daiva Tomkus and all-America Elaine Youngs. Tomkus tallied more than 500 kills last season and boasted an impressive .387 hitting percentage, and Youngs, a 6-2 sophomore, had more than 400 kills and ranked seventh in the conference in hitting percentage.

Outside starters for the 24-1 Bruins may include Samantha Shaver, Jenny Crocker, Jenny Evans and Laurie Jones, all of whom started at one time or another last season. Setting duties will fall to Traci Broadway and Jennifer Gratteau. The lineup will be bolstered by the addition of several top recruits.

Nebraska barely missed a shot at last year's semifinals after losing to Big Eight Conference rival Oklahoma, 3-2, in the Midwest regional semifinals. Four starters return this year, giving the Cornhuskers what coach Terry Pettit believes is a very experienced team with a lot of depth. The Huskers are 20-3 this season.

Another plus for Nebraska is height. With only one player under 5-9 (10 are 6-0 or taller), the Cornhuskers put up one of the best defenses in the country.

Returning are all-America Virginia Stahr, a 6-0 middle blocker who hit .404 last season and led the team with 87 blocks, and 6-2 Linda Barsness, a second-team all-Big Eight hitter. The two other returning starters are all-conference selections Val Novak and Carla Baker.

Pacific had a rough 1988 season, but coach John Dunning suggested that possibly was one of the more positive things to happen to the team. The Tigers lacked experience and were plagued by injuries but have overcome those obstacles on the climb to a 23-4 record in 1989.

Looking for a third national title, the Tigers have a strong and eager Elaine Oden back in the lineup. The two-time Big West player of the year had knee surgery in 1987.

"Elaina is holding up very well. She worked her way up to playing shape again and is slowly returning to her old form," Dunning said of the senior. "She's still not to the point she was before her surgery, but she has a few weeks before the tournament to get even closer. I think she'll make it."

Also back are Cathey Scotlan and 6-3 junior Krissy Fifer, whom Dunning called "one of the dominant outside hitters in college volleyball."

Pacific has compiled more wins than any other team (22-8, .733). The only other non-West Coast team (besides 1988 champion Texas) to play in the semifinals was Nebraska, runner-up in 1986. Texas-Arlington set a tournament record last season with most kills in a match with 112 against Pepperdine.

Returning talent will key Vikings' defense of 1988 crown

Like many other Division II women's volleyball teams, defending champion Portland State (33-13) lost some key players, including an all-America outside hitter and an all-tournament setter. But coach Jeff Mozzochi does return some talented players.

All-America hitter Jenny Norlin—who hit .310 and had 569 kills last season—is back, as is second-team all-America Kari Kockler, a middle blocker who had 55 block solos in 1988. Mozzochi also will look to seniors Maria Rickman and Amber Thomas for contributions and can fall back on 6-0 redshirt Quincey Shinnick and junior college transfer Kim Keith when necessary.

Freshman Suzy Hall has stepped in to assume setter duties and, according to Mozzochi, she learned the Vikings' system quickly. "Suzy has done a good job handling the pressure at setter. She's a talented player," Mozzochi said.

"We've juggled our lineup three or four times this season," he added. "The key players had to become a little more versatile to cover the losses we had to graduation."

"The schedule we put together was much tougher than last year," Mozzochi offered, "but we felt we had to do that in order to be as successful as we were last year. The idea was to prepare them to face anything."

UC Riverside (23-4) has two titles under head coach Sue Gozansky and is a strong contender for the 1989 championship. All-America outside hitter Sheri Benson is back for the Highlanders, as is second-team all-America setter Regina Carbajal.

Gozansky once again will look to Benson's court confidence to guide the Highlanders to their ninth post-season appearance.

"Sheri's a lot stronger emotionally and handles her frustrations a little better this year, which makes her a better player overall. She's still a good all-around player and the other girls look to her as a leader," Gozansky said of the senior.

"Each person has a role on the team. For example, without Regina, we wouldn't be the team that we are. But her abilities are often overshadowed by Sheri because people tend to look at hitting a lot and overlook the other players," Gozansky said. "Each person adds something different to the squad."

Also returning for the Highlanders are 5-10 outside hitter Leanne Clark and 6-0 senior middle blocker Jill Daniels, who leads the team in several categories, including hitting percentage and blocks.

Like Portland State, Debby Colberg's Cal State Sacramento squad lost two key all-Americans, including setter Chris Seifert. But fortunately for the Hornets, sophomore Karen Henderson stepped in and assumed setting duties quite nicely.

"I think Karen is our unsung hero," Colberg said. "Actually, she's probably the best athlete we've ever had. The only thing I worried about was her confidence in herself. But she's doing a great job, and I'm pleased with her performances."

Also boosting the 35-4 Hornets is the return of middle blockers Sue Hebel and Alison Espinosa and second-team all-America middle blocker Kelly Caddy.

"Sue has provided us with possibly the best leadership of any team I've coached in 14 seasons," Colberg said. "She has really helped this team play closer to its potential than any team I've ever had."

Central Missouri State (37-5), after an eighth consecutive Missouri Intercollegiate Athletic Association title, is a much stronger squad this year despite being fairly young.

"Although we're still young this year, I think that last year's play-off experience makes us a lot stronger," head coach Peggy Martin explained.

"It's obvious to me that we're much more confident, and our play proves that. Our losses have come to the very best teams in the nation, and I feel that we're very competitive with those teams," she added.

Headlining the Jennies is junior all-America Becky Belland, the only Division II player to participate in the U.S. Olympic Festival. The middle blocker leads the nation in kills per game (4.69), has a .391 kill percentage and averages 1.56 blocks per game. She recently was named the MIAA's most valuable player.

Sophomore Kristic Tompkins returns at setter and is averaging almost 11 assists per game. The Defending champion: Portland State University. The Vikings cruised past defending champion California State University, Northridge, in straight games in the December 9-11 tournament hosted by North Dakota State University. The win also earned the team its third Division II Women's Volleyball Championship title in the past five years.

Of those three, Cal State Northridge has the best winning percentage (.256, .806). Portland State, however, holds the best overall winning percentage with an 18-4 record and an .818 winning percentage. Nebraska-Omaha and Portland State are the only non-California teams to win more than 10 games in tourney history. Only one team record was set last season, when North Dakota State had 97 kills in a 3-2 match versus Tampa.

squad's only senior, outside hitter Rita Fischer, leads the team in digs with 3.5 per game.

North Dakota State, which finished third last year, has remained among the top-ranked teams this season despite a coaching change. Last season's coach-of-the-year, Cindy Olson, went to Texas-Arlington, and Jolyn Koppinger took over the Bison reins.

The 23-5 Bison return 6-0 junior middle blocker Brenda Schultz and senior setter Becky Schulze, as well as 5-10 outside hitter Nikki Hegg, 5-11 outside hitter Stephanie Carlson, 5-11 middle blocker Julie Sherman and 6-0 outside hitter/middle blocker Pam Tibersar.

Schultz, an all-tournament selection last year, will handle some of the duties vacated by three-time all-America Janet Cobbs, and Schulze is among the best setters in the nation, according to the American Volleyball Coaches Association.

North Carolina captures first field hockey crown

North Carolina goalie Evelien Spee got a chance to experience how it feels to deliver a winning shot November 19 as North Carolina defeated defending champion Old Dominion, 2-1, on penalty strokes to win the Division I Field Hockey Championship in Springfield, Massachusetts.

Spee was the fifth Tar Heel player to shoot in the penalty-stroke situation and got the winning stroke into the net to the left of Old Dominion's Kathy Fosina.

"Evelien is a very good stroker," North Carolina coach Karen Shelton said. "We have had more talent on teams in the past. This team is the most cohesive. You put that all together, and you win a national championship."

"It was a healthy, competitive college game," Old Dominion coach Beth Anders said. "I couldn't be more proud of my players. They gave everything that we asked and more. It was a very good game."

The contest was the first title game in the history of the Division I championship to be decided by penalty strokes. Three other games have gone into overtime, including the 1983 contest in which Old Dominion defeated Connecticut, 3-1, in triple overtime to defend its first title. The 1989 championship was the fifth straight to be decided by a single goal.

Shutouts over Big Ten Conference teams propelled North Carolina and Old Dominion into the championship game. The Tar Heels eliminated Iowa, 1-0, and Old Dominion defeated Northwestern, 1-0.

In the all-Big Ten third-place game, Northwestern defeated Iowa, 2-1.

The title was the first for North Carolina, which finished with a 20-2 record. Old Dominion ended the year 24-2, with both losses coming to North Carolina.

Peggy Anthon, Laurel Hershey, Imke Lempers and Leslie Lyness of North Carolina; Lisa Doran, Fosina and Maaik Hilbrand of Old Dominion; Nicole Cattell and Antoinette Lucas of Northwestern, and Melissa Sanders and Erin Walsh of Iowa were named to the all-tournament team.

Washington (Missouri) wins III volleyball

A goal set five years ago by Washington (Missouri) head coach Teri Clemens was realized when the Bears won the Division III Women's Volleyball Championship November 18 at home.

"When I took over here (at Washington), I had set a goal to win a national championship after five years." In Clemens' fifth season at the helm, the Bears did just that by defeating Ohio Northern, 15-10, 15-9, 15-11. A crowd of 3,225 watched the final match of the November 17-18 tournament at Washington.

Clemens, the first woman coach to lead a team to the title in the tournament's nine-year history, is no stranger to victories. She previously led Incarnate Word Academy in St. Louis to three consecutive state titles.

Also no stranger to winning is Washington standout Kathy Bersett, who was on two of Clemens' Incarnate Word teams. "Winning those titles in high school doesn't even compare," Bersett said. "It was only minor compared to this. It's like we won the world."

In the third-place match, Juniata was victorious over Menlo, 15-12, 15-8, 13-15, 15-6.

Named to the all-tournament team were Lori Nishikawa, Bersett and Brooke Horton, Washington (Missouri); Delna Lancaster, Menlo; Kris Witchey, Juniata, and Tammie Youngen, Ohio Northern.

Tar Heel women's soccer squad shows it still knows how to win

Winning does not get to be old hat. Just ask the North Carolina women's soccer team. The Tar Heels downed Colorado College November 18, 2-0, to claim a record seventh Division I Women's Soccer Championship title. North Carolina State hosted the semifinals and final.

The win was not easy, though, as both teams went into half time deadlocked at 0-0. North Carolina coach Anson Dorrance then decided to make some changes.

"The biggest adjustment we had made, and it made all the difference in the world, was having (Stacey) Blazo marking their withdrawn striker since they were playing with one forward high," Dorrance said.

"We also threw (Tracey) Bates on their second striker, and she was able to penetrate effectively. She owns the left line, and I felt comfortable with the ball on her foot. We probably made more adjustments in this game than in any other game this season," he added.

The Tar Heels' changes worked as Bates crossed the ball over to Shannon Higgins, who tallied Carolina's eventual game-winning goal at the 70:28 mark. Minutes later, North Carolina padded its lead with a Kristine Lilly goal off a Higgins' corner kick at the 83:48 mark.

Colorado College coach Dang Pibulvech was extremely pleased with his team's effort. "This was one of the best finals I've seen. We now have the ability to fight, but we used up our depth in the last two weeks, so I'm proud of them because of all the injuries," he said.

Tigers cocaptain Maryclaire Robinson also was pleased with the team's effort. "I thought they (North Carolina) were a little worried, and it was a good feeling. It's about time they respected us," she said.

Both teams advanced to the championship game with shutout victories in the semifinals. North Carolina eliminated Atlantic Coast Conference and cross-state rival North Carolina State, 1-0, and Colorado College advanced with a 1-0 decision over Santa Clara.

Lilly was named most valuable offensive player, and Bates was chosen as the most valuable defensive player. Joining them on the all-tournament team were North Carolina teammates Laura Boon, Mia Hamm, Carla Werden and Higgins; Kerri Tashiro, Kris Ziets and Robinson of Colorado College; Lindsay Brecher and Linda Hamilton of North Carolina State, and Tamie Batista and Melissa King of Santa Clara.

Soccer added

Rockford College will add women's soccer to its varsity sports program in 1990.

"We wanted to wait until girls' soccer became a high school sport with a state tournament so that we could justify recruiting," athletics director Bill Langston said.

Langston said he expects the team to play 12 to 15 games the first season and then go to a full 22-game schedule in 1991.

The school already has a varsity men's soccer program.

Two killed, five hurt in accident

Five members of Muskingum College's women's basketball team remained hospitalized November 19 after a traffic accident that claimed the lives of a teammate and a student coaching assistant.

The Associated Press reported that team member Michelle Simpson, 18, and student coaching assistant Mary Smith, 20, died in the weekend accident. Simpson was from Bristolville, Ohio, and Smith was from Coshocton, Ohio.

No further details on the mishap were available at press time.

Senior's goals spur Elizabethtown to III title

On the strength of Mark Pratzner's two second-half goals, Elizabethtown defeated Greensboro, 2-0, November 18 at home to win its first NCAA Division III Men's Soccer Championship. A crowd of 2,288 was on hand to celebrate Elizabethtown's triumph.

The Blue Jays started strong and dominated play throughout much of the first half. Pratzner, a senior forward, challenged Greensboro goalkeeper Chris Gillis on a cross midway through the first half and scored off a head shot, but the goal was disallowed after Pratzner was charged with roughing.

Greensboro opened the second half by pressing the Blue Jays into their own half of the field, but the Hornets could not manage a goal.

Elizabethtown regained momentum 10 minutes into the second half, narrowly missing on several opportunities.

Pratzner broke the tension at the 79:06 mark with his first goal. The play started when sweeper Chris Morgan took an indirect kick from about 22 yards out to the right of the goal mouth. The kick came to Tim Jones, who headed it to Pratzner. Pratzner then kicked it into the center of the goal.

Less than five minutes later, Pratzner scored again. Junior midfielder Robbie Martin took the ball down the right side, beating two Hornet defenders. Martin then chipped the ball over a diving Gillis and toward Pratzner in front of the goal. Pratzner blasted it into the right corner of the net.

"This is an unbelievable end to our season," said Elizabethtown coach Skip Roderick. "We seemed to start slowly but just kept getting better. But I don't think anybody would have thought we'd win it all this year. These players had something to prove to the coaching staff and the school, and I think they did it," he added.

Elizabethtown advanced to the championship game by defeating defending national champion UC San Diego, 1-0, in the semifinals. Phil D'Adderio scored the game's only goal at the 50:51 mark.

Greensboro advanced by turning back a strong second-half attack by Rochester Institute, last year's runner-up. Greensboro downed the Tigers, 2-0, on a pair of second-half goals.

South Dakota State edges defending cochampion for title

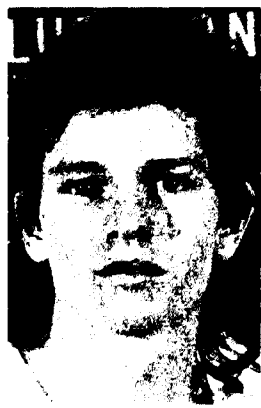

South Dakota State relied on strength at the top of its lineup and depth at the bottom to defeat defending cochampion Edinboro and claim the school's fourth team crown at the Division II Men's Cross Country Championships November 18 at East Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania.

The Jackrabbits' five-point victory over Edinboro was the second straight close finish in the men's championships. Last year's finish couldn't have been any closer: Edinboro and Mankato State tied with 77 points each.

Edinboro was paced by junior Chris Rauber, who was the top team scorer (second overall). The Fighting Scots, who had won or shared the last three team titles, also placed junior Uriel Rivera (ninth overall) among the first seven team scorers. But South Dakota State, which was paced by Craig Cassen's third-place finish, got the title-clinching point advantage from its fourth-fastest finisher, Tim Blackstone. His 30th-place overall finish was 13 team points better than Edinboro's fourth-best finisher.

In addition to Cassen and Blackstone, the Jackrabbits earned team points from Nate Trebilcock (13th overall), Paul Morgan (25th) and Ryan Stroschein (53rd). South Dakota State's 97 points was the highest winning total since Millersville captured the title with the same score in 1981.

Cal Poly San Luis Obispo fell short in its effort to become the first Division II school to claim both the men's and women's titles in the same year. After watching the Mustang women claim their eighth straight title, the men's team finished third with 114.

Rob Edson of Keene State claimed the individual title with a time of 31:44.9 over the 10-kilometer course. His mark was more than 15 seconds better than Rauber's sec-

Cal Poly San Luis Obispo women win eighth straight title

Cal Poly San Luis Obispo placed five runners among the top 11 team scorers on the way to its eighth straight team victory at the Division II Women's Cross Country Championships November 18 in East Stroudsburg, Pennsylvania.

The Mustangs' streak of consecutive titles is the longest in the history of NCAA women's competition. Coach Lance Harter, who also has directed the school's track team to four outdoor crowns, has coached more team champions than any other women's coach.

The Mustangs were paced by freshman Jamie Park, who finished third overall with a time of 17:35.8 over the five-kilometer course, and sophomore Melanie Hiatt, who finished fourth at 17:36.6. Other Cal Poly San Luis Obispo runners contributing to the team's 34 points were Teena Colebrook (ninth overall), Stephanie Barrett (11th) and Sydney Thatcher (13th).

Air Force, runner-up for the second straight year, placed two runners among the top five: senior Jill Wood (second, 17:20.7) and junior Callie Calhoun (fifth, 17:43.4). Wood also finished second overall in 1988. The Falcons finished with 67 points, 41 points ahead of third-place South Dakota State.

The only top-five finisher who was not from Air Force or Cal Poly San Luis Obispo was individual champion Darcy Arreola. The senior from Cal State Northridge, who sat out last season after finishing fifth in 1987, posted a time of 17:14.2, more than six seconds better than the second-place Wood. Arreola's individual title was the first for Cal State Northridge, which finished fourth with 121 points.

All-star play

Lock Haven's Dawn Zipay Therrell was all over the field November 11 in the Division III Field Hockey Championship, which her team won with a 2-1 decision over Trenton State.

Therrell's play was rewarded with selection to the all-tournament team.

David Terronez of Augustana (Illinois) repeated as Division III men's individual champion

Wisconsin-Oshkosh men repeat as III cross country champions

Wisconsin-Oshkosh placed four runners among the top 13 team scorers and coasted to its second straight Division III men's cross country team title November 18. The championships were hosted by Augustana College (Illinois).

The Titans' team score of 55 points was 63 points better than runner-up North Central (118). It was the largest margin of victory in the men's championships since 1978, when North Central finished 91 points ahead of Luther.

The Titans, who won despite losing two of their top three runners from last year's squad, were led by senior Ron Welhoefer, who finished the 8,000-meter course in 24:35 (sixth overall). Hot on his heels were teammates Scott Steuernagel (24:39, eighth), Dave Lambert (24:44, 11th) and Randy Damkot (24:49, 18th). Tim Moore finished 33rd overall in 25:04 to round out the scoring for coach John Zupanc's team.

North Central, which also finished second in 1988, was paced by seventh-place finisher Brian Wilson (24:39). Dave Columbus (12th) and Derron Bishop (19th) were the only other Cardinals to finish among the top 50.

Calvin College finished third with 153 points, and St. Thomas (Minnesota) was fourth with 174.

David Terronez of Augustana (Illinois) claimed his second straight individual title, becoming only the second runner to win consecutive men's crowns. Carleton's Dale Kramer accomplished the feat in 1976-77.

Terronez posted a time of 23:58, 13 seconds ahead of runner-up Seamus McElligott of Haverford. Adam Suarez of Calvin, who finished second last year, came in third with a time of 24:16.

One-two finish sparks Cortland State women

Sparked by first-, second- and fifth-place finishes by its top three runners, Cortland State totaled just 30 points and easily won its first Division III women's cross country team title November 18 at the 1989 NCAA championships. The Division III men's and women's races were hosted by Augustana College (Illinois).

The Red Dragons finished 32 points ahead of defending champion Wisconsin-Oshkosh. Ithaca finished third with 90 points, and St. Thomas (Minnesota) was fourth with 142.

Cortland State's total was the lowest in the women's championships since 1981, the meet's first year, when Central (Iowa) earned 26 points.

After finishing 15th overall in 1988, senior Marybeth Crawley led the field with a time of 17:19 over the 5,000-meter course. Second-place finisher Judy Sparks was one second off the pace, and Red Dragon teammate Vicki Mitchell finished fifth in 17:40. Other scorers on coach Jack Daniels' team were Michelle Lauritzen (16th) and Michelle Franklin (19th).

Wisconsin-Oshkosh got a strong showing from its top three runners but didn't have the depth to challenge Cortland State. Leading the second-place Titans were Cathy Vandermar (sixth overall), Laura Horejs (10th) and Nancy Dare (14th).

Other top individual finishers included Millicent Thweatt of Bethel (Minnesota), whose time of 17:26 was good enough for third place overall; Gretchen Farkas of St. Thomas (Minnesota), who finished fourth with a time of 17:26, and Ithaca College's Jannette Bonrouhi, who posted a seventh-place time of 17:49.

Crawley's individual title was the first for Cortland State and the first since 1985 to go to a runner from outside of Minnesota.

Bennett issues call for serious drug penalties

Drug czar William Bennett says Americans must "fight drugs with everything we've got," including serious, harsh measures and jail sentences.

Bennett, addressing a Charlotte, North Carolina, audience November 18, said, "We need to do more; we need to do a better job educating young people about the problems of drug abuse." Bennett said drug-education programs in schools are not enough.

"We need drug penalties. Serious penalties. We need to fight drugs with everything we've got."

Bennett was in Charlotte to visit relatives over the Thanksgiving holidays, United Press International reported.

He addressed a dinner at Sharonview Country Club given in honor of his wife Elayne's father, the late Clarence Glover.

Bennett told an audience of about 100 people that fighting drugs is "a tough and sobering business." "It probably will require building jails and building prisons," he said.

Bennett predicted that Congress will pass a drug bill at this session. "I don't think it's possible they can leave without passing a drug bill but giving themselves a pay raise," he said.

He said the most effective anti-drug efforts "work closely with the people in the community who stand up and take back their streets from drug dealers."

Bennett said 14 million Americans take illegal drugs once a month, while 50 Americans use nicotine and 100 million Americans consume alcohol.

But Bennett said there is a fundamental difference between legal drugs and illegal drugs such as cocaine and marijuana.

"The main reason we are opposed to these drugs is because heavy use of these drugs destroys human character," he said. "It (heavy drug use) makes people bad friends, bad spouses, bad neighbors and bad workers."

Radford to host steroid seminar

Many athletes see anabolic steroids as secret weapons in the quest to be the best. Physicians and educators see their use as the first step in destroying young, healthy bodies.

The information gap between these two groups will be addressed December 1 during a symposium sponsored by Radford University at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Richmond, Virginia.

The conference, "Anabolic Steroids: Steroid Abuse Among Minors," will focus on recognizing and treating the symptoms of steroid use by athletes, according to Donald Anderson, a Radford human services professor.

"Youths understand that steroids work, that they do improve performances by athletes," says Anderson. "But they don't understand the adverse effects of steroid use."

The symposium will include discussions of legislative efforts to stop steroid abuse nationwide and will look at the medical consequences of steroid use. Presenters will include Charles E. Yesalis of Pennsylvania State University; Marla Coleman of the Virginia State Department of Education; Eugene "Sonny" Kane of the U.S. Office of Education; Dennis Degan of the U.S. Food and Drug Administration, and John W. Gephart, a special agent with the Virginia State Police.

Health professionals and others will offer coaches and educators practical suggestions on how to approach the problem of drug misuse, says Anderson.

Offered in conjunction with the Virginia Association of Health and Physical Education, the conference is presented by Radford University's College of Education and Human Development, the Virginia State Department of Education, and the Department of Health Professions of Virginia.

For more information, contact Donald Anderson at 703/831-5214 or 5487, or write the College of Education and Human Services, Box 5820, Radford University, Radford, VA 24142.

Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge

Should you build a new stadium for $1,000 per seat, or make the one you have as good as new for $50 per seat?

The decision to restore the 77,000 seat stadium at Louisiana State University — rather than build a new one — was based in large part on how well one company, The Western Group*, had already done restorations for over 25 large college and professional stadiums. And at costs far below what the costs would have been to build.

The University learned that The Western Group's nearly 30 years of experience in stadium restoration and extensive technical know-how, coupled with financial responsibility and proven guarantees, is what kept making them the contractor of choice in stadium work across the U.S.

The Western Group points with pride at these major stadium projects: Duke, Harvard, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Workers install an overlay on every step to allow positive drainage.

How The Western Group restored this stadium

The restoration plan for LSU was developed by architectural engineers, Clement, Blanchard & Holmes (Baton Rouge). The actual restoration work was performed by the New Orleans branch of Western Waterproofing Company, a member of The Western Group.

First, existing plank seats and brackets were removed. Then, damaged and/or spalled

Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, Tulsa, Virginia, William & Mary, Lambeau Field in Green Bay, Legion Field in Birmingham, Memorial Stadium in Baltimore, The Cotton Bowl, Tampa Stadium, and Yankee Stadium.

Concrete is protected from weather and traffic with a special coating.

topside concrete treads and risers were repaired, as were structural cracks in the concrete seating area.

Latex concrete leveling courses were applied on all treads, and all topside expansion and control joints were repaired and sealed.

After the entire surface was cleaned by high pressure water blasting, 3M's Scotch-Clad Brand Sports Stadium Waterproof Traffic Topping was applied prior to the installation of the new seats.

Beneath the stands, Western workmen repaired concrete spalls and installed a new drainage system. They cleaned, repaired and applied acrylic waterproofing coatings to entranceway walls.

CORRECTION

Due to a reporting error, the summary of NCAA Council actions that appeared in the November 6 issue of The NCAA News erroneously reported an action pertaining to Bylaw 30.8.1 that was taken by the Council in response to a report of the Special Events Committee. The Council amended the bylaw to state that, beginning with the 1991-92 academic year, a "deserving winning team" shall be defined as one that has won a minimum of six games against Division I-A opponents.

NBC to begin college basketball TV coverage December 12

NBC sports will begin its coverage of the 1989-90 college basketball season Saturday, December 12, when the Oklahoma Sooners host the Runnin' Rebels of the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

NBC will present a 19-game broadcast schedule—including two double-headers—culminating in the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament championship game Sunday, March 11. Play-by-play announcer Dick Enberg and analyst Al McGuire return as NBC's primary broadcast team.

Big Ten, SEC women agree to annual tournament

The Southeastern Conference and the Big Ten Conference agreed November 15 to an annual women's basketball tournament, beginning in 1990, involving two teams from each league.

SEC Associate Commissioner Patricia W. Wall accepted the invitation by the Big Ten, the SEC reported.

The initial tournament is tentatively scheduled December 15, 1990, at a Midwestern site. The site will alternate between regions, and the teams will be selected each January.

Double-header coverage will be presented on consecutive Saturdays in February. On February 3, North Carolina State will visit UNLV, followed by DePaul at UCLA. On February 10, UCLA plays at Arizona as part of a double bill. The other game will be announced.

The ACC again will be the foundation of NBC Sports' coverage. Duke's Cameron Indoor Stadium will be the site of four telecasts, as the Blue Devils host conference rivals Georgia Tech (Sunday, January 28) and North Carolina (Sunday, March 4), as well as Pacific-10 foe Arizona (Sunday, February 25) and Notre Dame (Sunday, February 4). Virginia and Wake Forest of the ACC also will make appearances on NBC.

Notre Dame's Fighting Irish, featuring all five starters from last year's 21-9 team, will appear four times on NBC. In addition to traveling to Duke, Notre Dame will play at DePaul (Saturday, March 10) and will host Georgia Tech (Saturday, February 24) and Missouri (Saturday, March 3).

Louisville, one of the most successful college basketball programs of the 1980s, will be featured against DePaul (Saturday, January 27) and Virginia (Saturday, February 17). After their appearances on the opening telecast, UNLV and Oklahoma each will be seen twice more, once on either side of the Saturday, January 13, split-national telecast; UNLV will play at Temple and Oklahoma will host Texas.

The complete 1989-90 college basketball schedule follows (all Eastern times):

Millersville adds women's volleyball

Women's volleyball will become Millersville University of Pennsylvania's 18th varsity sport in the fall of 1990, according to Marjorie A. Trout, director of women's athletics.

Millersville will become the 11th institution in the Pennsylvania State Athletic Conference to sponsor women's volleyball.

"I am pleased that the university administration has approved the elevation of the volleyball club program to varsity status," said Trout. "The PSAC is a very competitive conference, and we are looking forward to our participation starting next year."

K&K's approach to sports insurance is a new concept in this specialized business. Now, for the first time, you or your broker can get all your insurance from a single source. And here's why that's a good idea.

Tailored coverage. A K&K representative along with your broker visits your facility. Inspects the buildings and grounds. Asks the right questions. With one company coordinating all your needs, you get exactly what you need. No more or less.

Coverage continuity. One company can obviously give you better continuity than several can.

One-stop shopping. It's easy and convenient, so you save a lot of time.

One-stop claim service. No delays in filing reports to several companies. Just call our claims experts for expedient service.

Coverage you can't get anywhere else. When your source is K&K, we'll provide general liability, property and casualty, worker's comp, equipment, auto, business interruption, and something you can't get anywhere else. Participant liability. We'll actually insure professional athletes while performing at your facility.

Cost savings. When you buy all your insurance from one source, we can save you money.

A representative who's a specialist. Your K&K representative will be someone who has specialized for years in the business of sports. Someone who knows how to identify and manage risk. And keep your premium cost down.

Easier administration. Don't you think that one company would be easier to deal with than several? You're right.

Transamerica Insurance Company. We combine the credibility and financial strength of Transamerica Insurance Company with our own solid commitment to the sports industry. Pretty impressive.

Rushing quarterbacks are running wild in I-A

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

This is a record passing season, but rushing quarterbacks also are having a remarkable year in Division I-A.

Entering this fall, just three players in major-college history had topped 1,000 yards both rushing and passing the same season. Already this season, three quarterbacks have turned the trick—Colorado's Darian Hagan (1,004 rushing and 1,002 passing), Air Force's Dee Dowis (1,096 and 1,021) and Southwestern Louisiana's Brian Mitchell (1,311 and 1,906).

Two more still have a mathematical chance. They are Notre Dame's Tony Rice, 834 yards rushing (after a career-high 141-yard effort November 18 vs. Penn State) and 1,015 passing, and West Virginia's Major Harris, 824 rushing and 1,757 passing. Rice closes November 25 at Miami (Florida), national leader in total defense. Harris ends Thanksgiving night at Syracuse.

Dowis has two games left, and the others have finished the season.

Another quarterback, Nebraska's Gerry Gdowski, just missed with 925 rushing and 1,326 passing. And Northern Illinois' Stacey Robinson, with a I-A record 1,443 rushing and 863 passing, was not far away.

The first player to do it was Drake tailback Johnny Bright in 1950 with 1,232 rushing and 1,168 passing. The others were quarterbacks—Reggie Collier (1,005 and 1,004) of Southern Mississippi in 1981 and Bart Weiss (1,032 and 1,449) of Air Force in 1985.

In rushing average, Gdowski leads at 7.91 per carry. Dowis averages 7.88, Harris 6.54, Robinson 6.47, Mitchell 5.53, Rice 5.42 and Hagan 5.40. In passing yards per attempt, Hagan leads at 11.79, then Gdowski, 9.75; Harris, 8.74; Dowis, 8.51; Rice, 8.33; Robinson, 6.74, and Mitchell, 6.30.

Houston on the verge

Unless Texas Tech (November 25) and Rice (December 2) can top Texas A&M's great defensive effort against Houston earlier this season, the Cougars' run-and-shoot offense will establish all-time Division I-A records in passing and total-offense yardage. Houston's scoring average seems certain to finish No. 2 in history.

Houston is averaging 646.7 yards in total offense and needs only a 303.5-yard average its last two games to break the record 584.2 set by Brigham Young in 1983. The passing record is wrapped up. Houston now averages 524.2; even with zero yards in its last two games, it would end at 428.9, breaking the 409.8 by BYU in 1980. (In case you are wondering, wipe out Houston's records of 1,021 yards total offense and 771 passing vs. Southern Methodist and the Cougars are still well above the records.)

In scoring, Houston's 53.9 is second to the record 56.0 by Army in wartime 1944. Jack Pardee's team needs a 66-point average in its last two games to break that mark.

Only Texas A&M, with great defensive speed, has held Houston in check. Andre Ware gained only 247 passing yards on 28 completions and was intercepted three times with one TD pass as A&M won, 17-13. Texas A&M held Houston to 369 yards in total offense. In Houston's other loss, Ware threw for 412 yards and four TDs, but Arkansas ripped the Cougar defense for 647 yards and won, 45-39.

Except for that game, Houston's defense, often overlooked, has been

Georgia Southern junior Joe Ross ranks fifth among Division I-AA rushers

New Mexico's Terance Mathis ranks high in Division I-A receiving average

John Gregory, Marshall, is among the Division I-AA passing-efficiency leaders

West Virginia's Major Harris ranks high in I-A passing efficiency and total offense a big factor in getting excellent field position for Ware and Company. Houston leads the country in takeaways at 42 and in turnover margin at plus-24 through nine games, as the offense has coughed up the ball only 18 times.

Also overlooked is Chuck Witherspoon, 5-foot-7, 210-pound junior tailback who has rushed for 1,022 yards (9.3 yards per carry) and ranks fourth nationally in all-purpose running at 215.8 yards per game.

Simple, really

How can Houston be so far above the all-time passing and total offense marks? It is simple, really. Passing plays average more yards than rushing plays and Houston passes more

Mathis, Hines and Thompson

New Mexico senior receiver Terance Mathis enjoyed a big game as his team, a 10-game loser, ruined the perfect season of Fresno State, a winner of 17 straight games, 45-22.

Already the career record-holder in receiving yardage (his final figure: 4,254), Mathis ended with 263 career catches, breaking the 262 by Mark Templeton of Long Beach State in 1983-1986.

But Duke senior Clarkston Hines, tied with Mathis going in, wound up with the career record of 38 TD catches, with Mathis next at 36. Mathis also reached 6,691 career all-purpose yards, third on the all-time list.

Indiana senior Anthony Thompson, a 6-4 senior, is one of the most prolific passers in college football history. On the all-time NCAA collegiate, all-divisions career lists, his 13,028 passing yards rank second, his 12,767 total offense yards are third and his 110 touchdown passes are second.

Only Neil Lomax of Portland State (last season, 1980) at 13,220 yards passing and 13,345 total offense and Willie Totten of Mississippi Valley State (1985) with 13,007 total offense and 139 TD passes outrank Baumgartner.

Wittenberg streak ends

Wittenberg's 34 straight winning seasons—longest by any NCAA team in any division since the start of official NCAA statistics in 1937—ended November 11 as Denison's single wing was in full swing in a 21-14 victory.

Central (Iowa) in Division III now has the longest streak at 29, with Nebraska in Division I-A next at 28. Before 1937, Princeton's 50-season streak was the longest, then Yale's 39 and Harvard's 38.

Quotes of the week

Iowa State's Blaise Bryant, one of the country's top rushers, on how he got his name: "My dad told me he was sitting in the hospital (lounge) watching a football game waiting for me to be born, heard the announcer say this guy 'scored in a blaze of glory' and decided, 'That's it. I'll name him Blaise.' I don't believe it. He has all kinds of crazy stories."

Nebraska middle guard Mike Murray treats opposing runners like the garter snakes he chased as a youngster on Chicago's South Side: "My friends and I used to catch them for fun when we were little. There was this big field next to some railroad tracks near my house and there were garter snakes in it. We used to catch them and have snake races and stuff. Sometimes we would let them go, but sometimes they got stepped on." (Tim Allen, Big Eight Conference SID)

UCLA coach Terry Donahue cruised through the 1980s with an NCAA-record seven straight bowl victories (three in the Rose Bowl) and didn't foresee this fall's "multicar pileup" that included three one-point losses and a three-pointer. "It's like driving without a seat belt," Donahue told Jerry Crowe, Los Angeles Times. "You always think the other guy's going to have the accident."

At a recent weekly press luncheon, Donahue, a hangdog expression on his face, sat, bowed his head, and spoke solemnly: "I've done a lot of soul-searching, made evaluations and talked to my athletics director about this." The reporoften than any team in history.

How often? Talk about passing emphasis. The country now is passing on 40 percent of all plays, and Pardee's team throws the ball on almost 75 percent of its plays—nearly twice the national average.

To put it another way, just five teams in the country are throwing more passes than Houston is completing. Houston averages 39.3 completions per game out of an all-time-high 63.1 passes per game (52.7 by Houston last year is the current record). By comparison, only Southern Methodist, Utah, New Mexico, Miami (Florida) and Stanford are averaging more attempts than Houston's 39.3 completions.

Ware vs. Detmer

Brigham Young sophomore Ty Detmer, after a big game November 18, is in position to break the all-time record in passing efficiency in BYU's last regular-season game November 25 at San Diego State. His 175.5 rating points are barely behind the record 176.9 by BYU's Jim McMahon in 1980.

Detmer's 11.17 yards per attempt is well above the record 10.27 by McMahon the same year (Ware is at 8.24). And Detmer's 384.8 passing yards per game is close to the record 392.9 by Utah's Scott Mitchell last year.

But Detmer is throwing only 34.4 passes per game to Ware's record 51.6. Thus, Ware seems certain to break the yardage records. He is averaging 424.9 yards in passing and 418.7 in total offense. Ware's 40 TD passes give him a good chance at McMahon's record 47 in 1980. A record 10.6 percent of McMahon's passes were TDs that year. Ware's 8.62 percent leads the current field.

son, already the career record-holder in TDs scored, got his 65th and became the highest scorer in Division I-A history with 394 points, one more than Florida State kicker Derek Schmidt in 1984-1987.

Record scoring day

The nation's Division I-A teams enjoyed an all-time-record scoring day November 18—53.7 points per game, both teams combined. That smashed the 52.5 set October 15 last year. The record pace in passing and total offense yards and per-play average also got another boost.

In Division I-AA, November 18 was the wildest offensive Saturday in history, with an incredible 777.4 total-offense yards per game, 52.1 points and 374.7 rushing. All three set records. The 402.7 passing was the third highest ever.

The exploits of I-AA's top players will be covered fully in that division's final notes story in The NCAA News of November 27.

II-III standouts

Not all the gifted rushing quarterbacks are in Division I-A. Shawn Graves, Wofford's little (5-8 and 157) freshman, established NCAA collegiate, all-divisions records for quarterback rushing and scoring this season with 1,483 yards and 24 touchdowns. He averaged 6.15 yards per carry and 134.8 yards per game and had eight 100-yard games. Air Force's Dowis set a I-A and collegiate mark with 1,315 yards a year ago, but Northern Illinois' Robinson broke his I-A mark this fall with 1,443, only to have Graves set the collegiate record. North Dakota State's Jeff Bentrin had the former college record, 23 TDs in 1986.

And there are some outstanding passers below I-A and I-AA. Kirk Baumgartner of Wisconsin-Stevens Point, a 6-4 senior, is one of the most prolific passers in college football history. On the all-time NCAA collegiate, all-divisions career lists, his 13,028 passing yards rank second, his 12,767 total offense yards are third and his 110 touchdown passes are second.

Reading from a yellow sheet of paper, he continued: "I, Terry Donahue, being of sound mind and body, declare myself insane to meet with sports writers today." He looked up and grinned mischievously, a wild look in his eye. His sense of humor is intact. (But his luck did not change in the season finale, a 10-10 tie with Rose Bowl-bound Southern California November 18. A 54-yard field-goal try by UCLA's Alfredo Velasco on the game's final play hit the crossbar and the Bruins ended up 3-7-1.)

820,668 is No. 4

The nation's top 10 attendance games November 18 totaled 820,668 spectators—fourth highest in history and largest ever in November. Tennessee's 93,851 turnout led the list and five more teams—Ohio State, Southern California, Stanford, Penn State and Georgia—were well above 80,000. The record is 833,285 October 22, 1983, and second is 827,232, September 16 of this year.

Division I-A attendance, averaging 41,804 through November 18, seems headed for a modest increase over last year, when the same 106 teams averaged 41,280. The final audit always reduces the game-day pressbox figures, so the margin will be closer. But many remaining games are big-stadium, traditional ones, offsetting the final audit somewhat.

In Division I-AA, turnouts of 59,774 at New Orleans for Grambling vs. Southern-Baton Rouge and 59,263 at Yale for the Harvard game helped the division reach 10,850 per game through November 18. The same 89 teams averaged 10,125 in 1988.

Hiram Porter, Northeast Louisiana, ranks high in I-AA interceptions

'Prop 48' recruits believe overall experience was beneficial

By Austin Wilson

Three Louisiana State University basketball players learned big lessons from the humiliation that came with failing to meet a cutoff score on a standardized test.

Now, they know first-hand the meaning of what coach Dale Brown preaches to his team: The most meaningful lessons are learned from the biggest disappointments.

All three had to sit out last year, victims of NCAA Bylaw 14.3, more commonly known as Proposition 48.

"Personally, I'm strong for Proposition 48," said 6-foot-9 Harold Boudreaux, a high school all-America. "It ought to make you work harder on the books."

"He didn't feel like that last year," added 7-foot Stanley Roberts, another high school all-America who had to sit out last season at LSU.

Roberts was one of those picked to an "all-America Prop 48" team last year by a national publication.

Largely because Roberts, Boudreaux and Maurice Williamson have done their time under the NCAA rule and are now eligible to join Chris Jackson on the court, LSU opened the season ranked No. 2.

Actually, Brown recruited six academically "iffy" players last year. Jackson passed the standardized test on his final try. Boudreaux, Roberts and Williamson signed and sat out. Steve Cooke, athlete of the year in Oregon, and Kevin Moses, a top prospect from Mississippi, also failed to make the cutoff score. Brown advised them to enroll in junior college and transfer to LSU next year.

Boudreaux had a B average both semesters of his freshman year and made the dean's list. Roberts had a B average for the spring semester. Williamson said he's making the grades, but it isn't coming easy. "I don't think college is supposed to be easy, is it?" he said.

Brown benched Roberts for the opening exhibition game against Athletes in Action this year for "failing to pay proper attention to academics."

"I love him for it," Roberts said. "I missed some classes. If I kept going the way I was, I would have flunked out."

Largely because of Jackson's development into a freshman all-America, LSU won 20 games last season without the rest of the talented young players Brown had courted.

That doesn't mean Brown likes Proposition 48 any more than he did last year when he joined Georgetown University's John Thompson and Temple University's John Chaney in a public protest of rules requiring stiffer academic standards for athletes entering college on scholarship.

The best way to accomplish the same goal, he said, would be to make freshmen ineligible across the board.

"That way, everybody saves an embarrassment. Give people five years to play four. Pay five years for a scholarship," he said.

"A lot of players aren't as secure as you think they are," he said. "You may look at them initially and think they are secure, but they have a lot of insecurities."

"People just sometimes see them as big bodies, but there is a lot of sensitivity and gentleness and insecurity in these kids, and I don't think you have to point it out to the whole world."

All three of the players said they thought they would pass their tests and be eligible as freshmen.

"I was really disappointed in myself. I felt so dumb," Roberts said. "I was really down, and coach Brown called me and told me to get my head up, to make something positive out of it. He picked me up."

Harold Boudreaux

Maurice Williamson

"It made me a stronger person," he said.

Boudreaux said he doesn't go along with those who believe the test is racially biased.

"That makes it sound like Blacks are dumb or can't pass a test," he said. "I think it might have something to do with where you come from, though."

Boudreaux is bilingual, raised in Cecilia, the heart of Louisiana's Cajun country, where French is the first language to the older generation and a strong second to the young ones.

Boudreaux's speech is inflected with the liquid Cajun accent. Roberts is small-town South Carolina, and Williamson is hard to peg by his accent. He grew up in New Haven, Connecticut, and his father, John, is a former NBA player.

"I thought I was going to pass the test, and I was really disappointed when I didn't," Williamson said. "But it didn't really shock me until I got here and everybody was practicing, then playing the games. That's when it really hit me. That really hurt."

"The year helped me in school. It helped to show me that basketball isn't everything in life, that you need an education to survive. That's one thing coach Brown and my father and my family always stressed to me."

But he said he prefers to think of what's ahead of him and his team, rather than dwell on last year.

"Like people say after they come out of jail, 'I've done my time.'"

Theft suspect no match for women's soccer team

While Batman has captured America's crime-fighting heart, Knox College's women's soccer team recently helped capture a suspected thief.

Just before starting a midweek practice recently, Siwash student-athletes Jennifer Goldsberry and Christine Lowry spied a female student calling for help while chasing a man. The pair took off in pursuit of the subject, who was suspected of stealing an item from the woman's dorm room.

After two blocks, Goldsberry and Lowry cornered the man. "You can't outrun us, so just give it up," said Goldsberry, as the rest of the women's soccer team arrived. "Where are you going to go?"

Apparently unable to come up with a good answer, the man waited meekly for the arrival of police and campus security personnel.

"I've never seen them run so fast," said Knox coach Amy Howley.

As unflattering as this may sound, Marsha Beasley must be considered a "missing link" of sorts.

Recently named rifle coach at West Virginia University, the former rifle all-America and graduate of East Tennessee State University is believed to be the first woman head coach of a varsity intercollegiate shooting program. Certainly, she is the first to head a perennial national contender, which the Mountaineers have been under Ed Etzel.

"I believe that's accurate," Etzel said of Beasley's status as the sport's first woman collegiate head coach. "I hadn't really thought about that, but I don't ever remember another woman head coach."

Few who are actively involved in amateur shooting probably thought much about the significance of the November 11 announcement, given the long-time success women have enjoyed in shoulder-to-shoulder competition with men. That, however, does not diminish its importance.

Beasley joins a program that has been sponsored as a varsity team by WVU since 1951. She reenters a sport with first-hand knowledge of how well women have performed and, most likely, will continue to perform.

One could argue that her ap-

pointment makes college shooting truly a coed sport.

Santa's Helper, the dream former Wake Forest University football player Chip Rives turned into a reality four years ago, again will provide toys to underprivileged children in the Winston-Salem, North Carolina, area. And Rives, who now works for a Cleveland, Ohio, management firm, will be back to lend a hand—even though other Wake Forest student-athletes have followed his lead.

Briefly in the News

Demon Deacon men's and women's basketball players have adopted Santa's Helper as a special project this year, and the program is benefitting from the fund-raising, gift-purchasing and delivery assistance provided by a local Elks lodge.

After raising $12,000 used to reach 200 needy families last year, the program's 1989 goals are to collect $15,000 and provide gifts to 250 families. Also included this year is a December 12 party at a local children's hospital.

"If you could have been with us the last three years and seen the children's reactions to Santa Claus showing up at their door, you would understand our excitement over the continued growth of this project," wrote Bert Woodard, former Wake Forest assistant sports information director who now works for Sports Marketing Enterprises, Inc.

Christmas came early, in a way, to the Cunningham family of Fritch, Texas. "It's what you'd want someone else to do for you or yours," explained Ken Hatfield, head football coach at the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville.

Chester Cunningham, 58, was at Arkansas to watch his son, Ed, whose offensive line play helped Texas defeat the Razorbacks, 24-

20. Shortly after the game, the elder Cunningham was rushed to a local hospital after suffering a massive heart attack.

As reported in a recent issue of Sports Illustrated, Hatfield and Arkansas athletics trainer Dean Weber stayed with the Cunningham family in the waiting room as doctors worked to save Chester's life. By the next day, it was apparent he would pull through.

During the next week, Hatfield visited Cunningham twice a day, and more than 30 Arkansas players stopped by—as did Chancellor Daniel Ferritor. Ed, who stayed, got to work out regularly in the Arkansas weight room.

Arkansas also provided food and lodging for the family.

When doctors decided Chester was well enough to be moved to an Amarillo, Texas, hospital to continue recovery closer to home, no commercial airline would accept him as a passenger. Arkansas officials arranged for the flight to be made on the school's private jet.

Helping hands: North Carolina State University, as part of an Atlantic Coast Conference-wide effort, collected almost a full tractor-trailer load of food for victims of Hurricane Hugo. Donations were accepted during the Wolfpack's recent football game against Kent State University. ACC and Southeastern Conference efforts produced over $60,000 and six truckloads of food.

Red Cross Day at John Carroll University (November 4, when the Blue Streaks hosted Mount Union College) netted $2,774.34, which was donated to relief efforts resulting from the San Francisco earthquake.

Virginia Commonwealth University freshman volleyball player Danielle Petersen helped her teammates in an unusual way recently. When the Rams' bus broke down on the way back from a match at East Carolina University, Petersen spent more than two hours under the hood with a mechanic and was credited with helping get the team back on the road.

For the second straight year, Pennsylvania State University football players are featured on trading cards being distributed by The Second Mile, a State College, Pennsylvania, nonprofit organization. According to Katherine Bernecker of The Second Mile, the cards are intended to "establish rapport with students; serve as a reward for progress made in achieving personal and academic goals, or as a focus for discussion during counseling sessions or meetings."

Three professional seminars and a sports-technology symposium will be held early next year in conjunction with the Fifth World Nordic Skiing Championships for the Disabled in Jackson, New Hampshire. The Jackson International Seminars and Sports Technology Expo will run January 16-31, and the championships are scheduled January 29-February 7.

More information is available by calling 802/295-3625, and all net proceeds from the events will benefit the U.S. disabled ski team.

Peach Bowl festivities will kick off November 30 with the First Atlanta Contract Signing Dinner, an event that will include the official signing of the 1989 contract for this postseason football game by selection committee chair Leeman Bennett and the head coaches of the schools invited to play in the December 30 contest.

Trivia Answer: Women have won at least one NCAA individual rifle title in five of the nine championships contested. Last year, women swept the individual competition.

Tar Heels again provide funds for school programs

The department of athletics at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, has donated $100,000 in postseason basketball tournament revenue to the university libraries to support programs and services.

The announcement was made by Chancellor Paul Hardin at a recent meeting of the board of trustees.

John D. Swofford, director of athletics, initiated discussions about the gift with Hardin last spring when state budget cuts totaling $3.2 million hampered the operation of several campus units, including the university libraries. Most of the funds were restored, but the university began the fiscal year July 1 with a $792,000 deficit.

The gift to the libraries came from the revenue the athletics department received after coach Dean Smith's basketball team made its 15th consecutive appearance in the Division I Men's Basketball Championship last spring.

Swofford says those funds were not part of the athletics department's budgeted revenue.

The athletics department in the past has offered its assistance to the university for academic purposes.

Under a cooperative agreement with North Carolina State University, for example, $1 from each full-price ticket to the annual football game has gone to the student aid offices at each school. Since the program began in 1987, the office of scholarships and student aid has received more than $67,000 to distribute to students. That figure does not include the 1989 game. In 1984, $25,000 earned by the Tar Heel football team for moving the time of a Duke game to accommodate network television went to the college of arts and sciences and Friends of the Library.

Other recent examples of support for academics by the athletics department include:

- Distribution of $12,750 to the office of scholarship and student aid through the corporate-sponsored player-of-the-game awards at football and basketball games. That figure is based on games televised and broadcast during the 1987-88 and 1988-89 seasons.

- Giving $50,000 to the university fund from proceeds received from the Collegiate Legends Classic basketball game between Tar Heel and UCLA alumni.

- Support totaling $15,000 in 1988 to the new Black Cultural Center in Frank Porter Graham Student Union to assist in its efforts to improve racial understanding at the university.

"These actions are an important show of support for the academic mission of this university, and we are most grateful," said Chancellor Hardin.

Women warned of possible injury if early workouts are too intense

Women who start exercise programs may find that their bodies are setting them up for injury, a doctor says.

Dr. Victor M. Goldberg, chair of orthopedics at Case Western Reserve University, said women are more prone to injury because their bodies are weaker and less efficient than men's for sports requiring leg strength and endurance.

Women who start aerobics, running or basketball may have an injury rate 50 to 60 percent greater than men, Goldberg says.

But, he adds, the risk diminishes as strength and endurance increase; so a dedicated female athlete has no more risk than does a dedicated man.

A large part of the problem is biological, the doctor said.

"Women have wider hips. As a result, their femur (the long thigh bone that extends from the hip to the knee) turns in slightly more," he says.

This, in turn, makes women tend to be more knock-kneed, which makes the knee joint more vulnerable to the stress of exercise, he says.

The somewhat off-center bone structure extends down to the feet, so women literally may be less steady on their feet, he says.

Women also have more flexibility in their ligaments, which means their knees have less support, he said. And they tend to have less ability to build muscle to keep joints in place.

The results, he says, show up at his office. Goldberg says he sees more women than men complaining of pain around the knee. However, more men than women undergo arthroscopic knee surgery—possibly, he says, because women are more likely to stop exercising after pain begins.

Osteopath Richard M. Bachrach, who operates a sports-medicine clinic in New York City, says that poor alignment is not solely a female problem. "It can be present in men as well as in women," he told the Associated Press.

But he concedes that women do have greater risk in starting exercise. For one thing, he said, women can't become as strong as men because they have a greater percentage of their body weight as fat—and, consequently, less as muscle—than do men.

In addition, he says, women who become dedicated to athletics may push themselves harder and faster than men, play through pain, and wind up with more severe overexertion injuries.

"It depends on how goal-oriented they are," says Bachrach, who says he treats many ballet dancers. "Take a ballet dancer—forget it. They are so goal-oriented that, rather than back off, they are going to disregard body signs."

Goldberg suggests concentrating on the quadriceps muscles in the front of the upper leg and the muscles of the calves.

And, he said, it doesn't require health-club machines—simple leg weights of a couple of pounds can do the job.

Men's, women's games keep getting bigger, better

By James M. Van Valkenburg
NCAA Director of Statistics

Men's college basketball moves into the 1990s this season, and the game continues to grow in every aspect.

The three-point shot and 45-second clock have combined to open up the inside game, and spectators like it, judging by back-to-back Division I attendance jumps totaling 1.3 million over the past two years, to reach 33 million.

The excitement of the annual "March Madness," the Division I Men's Basketball Championship, has led to dramatic increases in tournament revenue.

The building of domed stadiums and 20,000-seat-plus arenas has become a major growth industry in the past decade, and domes dominate the tournament's future. The 1970s boom in ordinary-sized arenas slowed a bit in the 1980s, but 120 new arenas were built in the decade by NCAA colleges, and 37 more are planned for the early 1990s. Many colleges opened this season in new arenas.

Basketball's fast-paced intensity and excitement appeal to the public. Perhaps Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs put it best: "None of those football guys could play for me. Heck, they've got to stop every 30 seconds to figure out what to do next." So if you are bored with watching huddles, basketball's coming is something to celebrate.

On the downside, increased pressure and visibility have led to a high coaching-turnover rate and problems in recruiting, and teams below Division I have not shared in the attendance and revenue increases.

Entering this season, 53 Division I teams have changed coaches, or 18.2 percent of the division's 292 teams. That turnover rate is above the 14.3 last season and the 13.4 for 1988, but below the record-high 23.1 percent for 67 changes entering 1987.

The youngest of the first-year coaches and the youngest of all Division I coaches is a 1985 Fordham graduate with the wonderful "all-America" name of Jack Armstrong, the new Niagara head coach. He will be 27 January 3. The oldest Division I coach is Hofstra's Butch van Breda Kolff at 67.

Division I gains two members this season—Missouri-Kansas City and Tulane. It loses three Oral Roberts, Houston Baptist and Southeastern Louisiana. Division II is up to 189 teams, with the gain of Northeastern Illinois, South Carolina-Spartanburg, Stanislaus State and Lenoir Rhyne more than offsetting the loss of Puget Sound and Randolph-Macon. The Division III total remains at 289.

With a few exceptions, Division I conference lineups look much like last year. Tulane rejoins the Metropolitan Collegiate Athletic Conference, having resumed varsity basketball. Long-time independent Marquette moves into the Midwestern Collegiate Conference.

Mount St. Mary's (Maryland) moves into the Northeast Conference, but the Northeast loses Loyola (Maryland) and stays at nine members. Loyola is part of the new two-division lineup in the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference. It added Siena, Canisius and Niagara from the North Atlantic Conference, and they are in the MAAC North Division along with Army, Fordham and Holy Cross. Loyola is in the South with Fairfield, Iona, La Salle, Manhattan and St. Peter's, as the MAAC goes from eight members to 12, while the North Atlantic drops from 10 members to seven and the Trans America Athletic Conference drops from 10 to nine with the loss of Houston Baptist.

A first since 1952

The top four scorers in Division I are returning for the first time since Gathers is just the second man in Division I history to win the scoring and rebounding (13.7) championships in the same season. Jackson was the highest-scoring freshman ever in Division I history and only the second freshman consensus all-America.

Basketball notes

1952. They are Loyola Marymount's 6-7 Hank Gathers (32.7); Louisiana State's 6-1 Chris Jackson (30.2); La Salle's 6-6 Lionel Simmons (28.4), and Gerald Glass (6-6, 28.0), Mississippi. All are seniors but Jackson, a sophomore.

Simmons is the career leader in scoring and rebounding average among all current players in the division. By duplicating his 1989 figures in 1990, he would have some remarkable four-year career figures—3,278 points (second in Division I history to 3,667 by Pete Maravich, Louisiana State 1970, over three seasons), plus 1,438 rebounds, 335 assists, 244 blocks and 234 steals.

Jackson is the only returning consensus all-America player, and Simmons is the only returnee from the consensus second team.

The other scoring-rebounding championship double was by Xavier McDaniel of Wichita State in 1985. The other freshman consensus all-America was Wayman Tisdale of Oklahoma in 1983.

The top five scorers returned in 1952. They were Temple's Bill Mikvy, the "Owl Without A Vowel," 1951 champion at 29.2; Washington and Lee's (a Division I member then) Jay Handlan 26.2; West Virginia's Nick Workman 26.1; Duke's Dick Groat 25.2, and Kansas' Clyde Lovellette 22.8. As it turned out, Lovellette won the 1952 scoring crown at 28.4, and he remains the only Division I scoring champion ever to play for a NCAA championship team. Champions return in six of the nine individual categories. Among the career leaders, Kansas State senior Steve Henson now ranks third on the all-time list in free-throw percentage at 90. He has a chance to break the career record of 90.9 by Greg Starrick, Southern Illinois 1972. Henson will need at least 82-for-87 for 94.3 percent this season to break it.

NFL players admit accepting extra benefits in college

By Dean Golembeski

Nearly one-third of almost 1,200 current and former National Football League players responding to a survey said they accepted illegal payments while in college.

Fifty-three percent said they saw nothing wrong with breaking NCAA rules to get extra cash.

Conducted by Allen L. Sack, a sociology professor at the University of New Haven, the study was based on responses from 1,182 active and retired NFL players—roughly a third of the 3,500 contacted.

"For me," Sack said, "the results said that it's far more than what they say at the NCAA, that it's not just a renegade institution or the deviant player. There's a substantial underground economy that's likely to be unstoppable."

"I think the problem with the system is that it's humiliating for athletes and degrading for higher education," Sack said November 16 during a telephone interview.

Seventy-eight percent of the 1,182 active and retired NFL players said the financial aid provided student-athletes under existing NCAA rules is inadequate.

Alumni payments

Sack said players reported that a "vast majority" of illegal payments were made by alumni, although coaches also reportedly made improper payments. Payments were made by sliding cash under dormitory doors or in congratulatory handshakes after games, Sack said. One player said he routinely found cash in his helmet every Monday before practice.

An important source of illegal cash was derived from the sale of complimentary admissions each player receives. Sack said one player admitted getting as much as $1,000 per ticket. (Note: NCAA rules no longer permit the use of hard tickets.)

Most players who admitted accepting illegal payments said they received about $1,000 over four years. In addition to cash, they accepted free meals and clothing, Sack said. A new suit was a popular "payment" among older players, the study found.

One player, however, said he received some $80,000 in illegal payments during his college career. Another said he was offered part interest in an oil well but refused, Sack said.

Names provided

Sack worked closely with the NFL Players Association in conducting the study. The players group provided names and addresses of 3,500 former and current NFL players, each of whom was mailed a questionnaire.

The players association agreed to participate because it wanted to learn how widespread the use of agents was among college athletes. Sack said 17 percent of those surveyed said they had been approached by agents while undergraduates.

Sack said the responses and his own research indicate illegal payments are nothing new and, in fact, have been going on for about 100 years. To support his claim, Sack's study quotes a letter written in 1902 by a dean at Yale University to then coach Walter Camp discussing under-the-table payments.

The study also found cheating to be most pervasive in major conferences.

In the Southeastern Conference, the study found there was an explosion of illegal payments beginning in 1965. The study found that 83 percent of former SEC players knew of athletes who took illegal payments, while 67 percent of the former SEC players admitted receiving payments.

Among SEC players older than 40, 53 percent said they knew of athletes who accepted illegal payments, while only 38 percent admitted to taking any money, Sack said.

"Something started happening in 1965," Sack said. Maybe it was TV or aggressive recruiting. I don't totally understand it myself."

Disputes study

Mark Womack, associate commissioner of the SEC for finance and administration, said he had "glanced" at the study and doesn't believe it provides an accurate reflection of illegal payments in his conference. He contended the percentages are "way too high."

Womack noted that only 115 former SEC players responded but about 2,500 have played in the SEC since 1965. The league has been in existence since 1932-33.

"The data base is probably not a good indication of the college scene,"

Womack said from his office in Birmingham, Alabama.

He said the study also could be skewed because it focuses only on "superstar" college athletes—those who typically go to the NFL. He said these top players are the most likely of all college athletes to cheat.

The practice of accepting illegal payments has remained most consistent over the years in the Big Ten and Pacific-10 Conferences, Sack said. Regardless of the age of the former players, the percentage of cheating remained consistent, indicating its longstanding use in the two conferences, he added.

Among former Big Ten players, 48 percent said they knew of athletes who took illegal cash, while 36 percent admitted to putting the money in their own pockets.

Fifty-nine percent of the former Pac-10 players said they knew of others who broke the rules, and 39 percent admitted receiving illegal payments.

with the Final Four—took its place in the 1980s alongside the World Series and Super Bowl. Great championship games, last-second heroics and big upsets were the rule.

Who can forget the closing-seconds winning shots by North Carolina's Michael Jordan and Indiana's Keith Smart in New Orleans, North Carolina State's miracle finish, Villanova's incredible perfect game, Kansas' Danny Manning and Michigan's Rumeal Robinson winning the last two titles at the line under great pressure, Georgetown's relentless defense, the great tournaments by Darrell Griffith and Pervis Ellison of Louisville, and the Houston-Louisville dunk-athon in the 1983 semifinals?

Ten coaches with two or more Final Four trips dominated the 1980s, winning seven of the 10 crowns. Only Louisville's Denny Crum and Indiana's Bob Knight won two titles—Crum in 1980 and 1986, Knight in 1981 and 1987. Crum was the only coach with four Final Fours. Georgetown's John Thompson, Larry Brown of UCLA and Kansas, Duke's Mike Krzyzewski, and Houston's Guy Lewis each had three.

North Carolina and Georgetown, opponents in that memorable one-pointer at New Orleans in 1982 (Dean Smith's team won, 63-62), are tied for first in NCAA tournament victories in the '80s. Each is 25-9. Others with at least 10 tournament wins in the decade are Louisville 23-6, Indiana 18-7, Duke 18-7, Villanova 17-7, Kansas 16-5, North Carolina State 14-7, Oklahoma 14-7, Virginia 14-7, Syracuse 14-8, Nevada-Las Vegas 13-7, Iowa 13-10, Houston 12-5, Louisiana State 12-8, Michigan 11-4, Kentucky 11-8, Illinois 11-8 and Kansas State 10-6.

In full-season play, North Carolina ranks as the top winner with an 817 percentage on a 281-63 win-loss record, with Nevada-Las Vegas (271-65) edging Georgetown (269-69) for second, .807 to .796. Others in the top 20 are DePaul .778, Temple .743, Syracuse .736, UTEP .735, Oklahoma .731, Kentucky .730, St. John's (New York) .728, Indiana .726, Oregon State .726, Louisville .723, Illinois .721, Mem-

Women on the rise

Women's basketball is on the rise entering the 1990s, after eight seasons in the 1980s under the NCAA banner produced great change.

National Division I attendance reflects the growing interest in the women's game, jumping an amazing 78.3 percent since 1982. It passed the two-million mark in 1989 with an increase of more than 250,000—the largest ever. For all teams, the national figure of 3,576,656 in 1989 was up 49.2 percent over 1982.

NCAA Productions put together a women's Division I regular-season television package last year that returns this season. The all-time women's record crowd of 24,563 (23,912 paid) came at Tennessee in December 1987, vs. Texas.

The Division I Women's Basketball Championship's attendance exploded from 56,320 in 1982 to 176,490 in 1989.

Rules-makers introduced a smaller ball for women in 1985 and added the three-point shot in 1988. The 30-second clock was there before the NCAA took control in 1982. The smaller ball makes ball handling easier, and the three-pointer has started to make an impact on coaching strategies.

Coaching changes have stayed well below the men's level. This year, 38 of 279 Division I members have different coaches than last season.

Hawaii's 6-1 Judy Mosley is the top returnee in Division I scoring (24.5) and third in rebounding (13.4). Kent's Amy Slowkowski will defend her free-throw-shooting championship (92.6). Other returning individual titlists include Florida International's Sheila Reynolds in field-goal percentage (64.5) and Mississippi Valley State's Donna McGary in steals (5.4 per game, a record).

Stanford's Jennifer Azzi, the top returning three-point field-goal shooter (49.5 percent), is the only women's all-America player back.

1980s history

Louisiana Tech and Tennessee have dominated the Division I tournament with six appearances each in the semifinals and finals. Each school also has won two national titles (Louisiana Tech in 1982 and 1988, Tennessee in 1987 and 1989). The other two-time winner is Southern California (1983-1984).

Who can forget Cheryl Miller leading Southern Cal's back-to-back titles, the comeback by Louisiana Tech from 14 points down in the second half to edge Auburn in 1988 or Bridgette Gordon leading Tennessee to four consecutive appearances in the semifinals and finals?

Texas is the division's top winner for the eight seasons of NCAA control with a 249-23 record for a .915 percentage, edging Louisiana Tech's .911 (246-24). Others in the top 20 are Long Beach State .844, Montana .843, Auburn .834, Georgia .813, Ohio State .809, Mississippi .805, St. Peter's .789, Rutgers .781, Tennessee .781, Southern California .773, Northeast Louisiana .748, Middle Tennessee State .742, Virginia .738, Washington .738, Holy Cross .737, Nevada-Las Vegas .734, Western Kentucky .730 and Old Dominion .728.

MCC announces TV games

The 1989-90 Midwestern Collegiate Conference basketball season will have television coverage from the opening tip to the final buzzer, according to an agreement announced between the conference and Creative Sports Marketing, Charlotte, North Carolina.

The first regular-season game, Evansville against Missouri in the first round of the Maui Classic, will be one of four contests involving MCC teams on ESPN. ESPN also will carry the conference tournament championship game.

In addition, the MCC has a syndicated game-of-the-week package that includes 12 regular-season games plus the quarterfinal and semifinal games of the MCC tournament. SportsChannel America, a national sports cable system with more than 8.5 million subscribers, will broadcast the complete game-of-the-week package, including the first six games of the MCC championship. The network will carry three additional MCC contests.

In all, more than 30 games are scheduled for television. "This television package will provide a wonderful opportunity for the constituents who follow our universities and for the general public to see the high caliber of basketball that is played in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference," said MCC Commissioner Daniel B. "Tucker" DiEdwardo.

The MCC has eight dates with Big Ten Conference opponents, excluding regular-season tournaments, highlighting the 1989-90 nonconference schedule. In addition, the MCC has 10 games each against members of the Missouri Valley and Mid-American Athletic Conferences and nine games against members of the Association of Mid-Central Universities.

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY/AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYER

Arizona football worth $23 million annually to Tucson, study reveals

Projections show the University of Arizona's football program generates an annual economic impact of $23.8 million to $28.9 million on Tucson, as much as a medium-sized business, according to a commissioned study.

"Based on our assumptions, we can predict that the impact of a single game in Tucson is somewhere between about $1.66 million and $2.5 million, depending upon the amount of attendance," or between nearly $10 million and $15.1 million for a six-game schedule, said David Tansik, associate professor of management and policy, who headed the project.

The study was based on findings from a survey of people who attended the 1988 Southern Cal-Arizona night game.

"That amount of money is probably equivalent to the sales of a medium-sized firm," said Tansik.

"The football program essentially looks to me like it contributes to the Tucson economy in the amount equal to a medium-sized business" that employs about 150 to 200 people, said Tansik, who teaches in the college of business and public administration.

"I think it's important for people to realize that sports are, as we say, a big business," said Arizona athletics director Cedric W. Dempsey.

Tansik said the study also suggests that the inaugural Copper Bowl, to be held New Year's Eve at Arizona Stadium, "will contribute substantially more" than a single regular-season game.

Added money likely to be generated from the bowl game will come in large part from hotel, restaurant and other expenses generated by out-of-town visitors, though ticket sales will be split between local residents and visitors, said Tansik.

He conducted the study with doctoral candidate Terri Lituchy.

The study was undertaken last fall to help the athletics department "understand our program, understand our product," Dempsey told the Associated Press.

He said the College Football Association completed a study about three years ago, prompting the Arizona study.

But Dempsey said that while the CFA project suggested a member institution's impact at $36 million, the local study was more conservative.

Dempsey said it could help improve marketing and promotional efforts.

The researchers used data from a random-sample survey obtained from among the 49,647 people who attended the 1988 Southern Cal-Arizona night football game.

Arizona Stadium has a capacity of 57,000.

Surveys were distributed to 8,540 people divided into five types of ticket-holders, with 1,056 responses.

Categories examined included food, transportation and parking, souvenirs, hotel, clothing, stadium seats, babysitting, and other expenses before and after the game.

Tansik said the survey showed, in part, that those responding, who represented 2.13 percent of the total attendance, spent $45,640.84.

Extrapolating that figure to the total attendance showed total expenditures ranging from $1.66 million to $2.26 million, depending on how many purchases were represented per ticket-holder, ranging from 1.75 to 3.2, Tansik said.

Ticket sales were not counted, but concessions sold inside the stadium, salaries, staff expenses, and visiting and home team expenses were tallied into both sets of figures.

Sports officials association issues code of ethics

Standards of conduct that emphasize "the need to preserve and encourage confidence in the professionalism of officiating" are outlined in a code of ethics recently published by the National Association of Sports Officials (NASO).

The code "outlines standards of conduct to which officials should be held," said Barry Mano, NASO president. Its purposes are:

- To provide NASO members a meaningful set of guidelines for professional conduct and to provide them with agreed-upon standards of conduct.

- To provide other sports officials with guidelines and standards for their consideration.

- To provide players, coaches, administrators, fans and media with criteria by which to judge officials' actions as "professionals."

"Our members face some of their most difficult questions away from the playing field," Mano said. "They've asked for basic guidance principles that will help them make the right decision when faced with a myriad of problems. A wide variety of ethical questions have been presented over the years, from opportunities to officiate games that may involve close friends to handling media interviews.

"In response to these needs and after countless hours of research, writing and review, the NASO board of directors has created the code of ethics in hopes of providing those needed principles," he said.

In its introduction, the code declares that "it is vital every official approach each assignment in a professional manner." As impartial judges of sports competition, officials have "an obligation to perform with accuracy, fairness and objectivity through an overriding sense of integrity."

The code also defines professional officials as those who "voluntarily observe a high level of conduct, not because of fear of penalty, but rather out of personal character."

Six articles of conduct are included in the code:

Article I

Sports officials must be free of obligation to any interest other than the impartial and fair judging of sports competitions. Without equivocation, game decisions which are slanted by personal bias are dishonest and unacceptable.

Article II

Sports officials recognize that anything which may lead to a conflict of interest, either real or apparent, must be avoided. Gifts, favors, special treatment, privileges, employment or a personal relationship with a school or team which can compromise the perceived impartiality of officiating must be avoided.

Article III

Sports officials have an obligation to treat other officials with professional dignity and courtesy and recognize that it is inappropriate to criticize other officials publicly.

Article IV

Sports officials have a responsibility to continuously seek self-improvement through study of the game, rules, mechanics and the techniques of game management. They have a responsibility to accurately represent their qualifications and abilities when requesting or accepting officiating assignments.

Article V

Sports officials shall protect the public (fans, administrators, coaches, players, et al) from inappropriate conduct and shall attempt to eliminate from the officiating avocation/profession all practices which bring discredit to it.

Article VI

Sports officials shall not be party to actions designed to unfairly limit or restrain access to officiating, officiating assignments or association membership. This includes selection for positions of leadership based upon economic factors, race, creed, color, age, sex, physical handicap, country or national origin.

Copies of the NASO code of ethics can be obtained by writing to the National Association of Sports Officials, 2017 Lathrop Avenue, Racine, Wisconsin 53405, or by calling the organization's administrative director at 414/632-5448.

Marketing directors to organize

Roger O. Valdiserri, associate athletics director at the University of Notre Dame, has been named chair of the organizing board of directors for the newly created National Association of Collegiate Marketing Administrators (NACMA).

NACMA has scheduled a meeting in conjunction with the January 4 NCAA Professional Development Seminar in Dallas, at which a full slate of officers and directors will be elected.

Joining Valdiserri on the organizational board are James Alnuti, Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference; Vince Cazzetta, U.S. Military Academy; Jeff Hathaway, University of Maryland, College Park; Deena Johnson, California State University, Fresno, and Diane Wendt, University of Denver.

According to a report announcing the appointment of the organizational board, NACMA is an outgrowth of discussions among a group of athletics administrators involved in marketing that included Valdiserri; Neal Bendesky of the University of Miami (Florida); Joe Castiglione of the University of Missouri, Columbia, and Mike Whitsitt of the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.

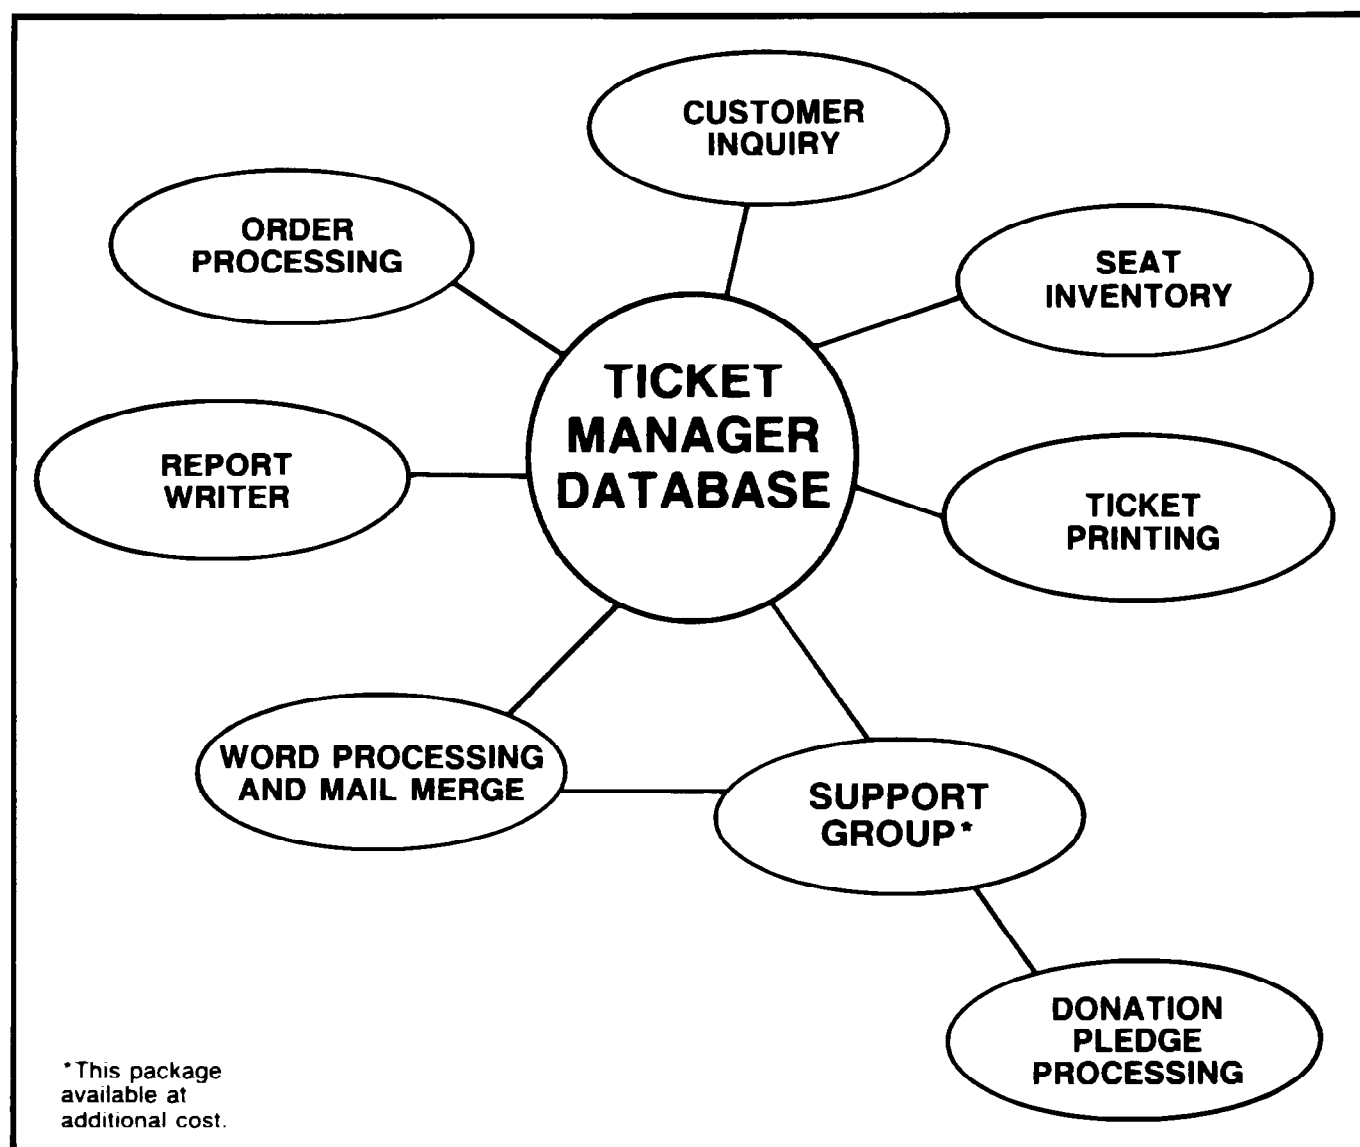

NACMA will be a nonprofit organization targeted at those working in collegiate marketing, promotions and related fields at NCAA member institutions, as well as administrators at members of the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) and the National Junior College Athletic Association (NJCAA).

"The proliferation, thrust and impact of marketing and promotional efforts and programs on the collegiate level in recent years have served to accelerate interest in an organization where practitioners can exchange ideas, formulate concepts and practices, and establish operating and ethical standards," Valdiserri said. "The activities of the organization also will go a long way in elevating the profession of collegiate sports marketing and promotions administrators."

Information on NACMA is available from Valdiserri (telephone 219/239-7516), Bendesky (205/284-2400), Castiglione (314/882-0745) or Whitsitt (702/739-0822).
